

Plaintiff Ingenuity 13, LLC, ("Ingenuity") seeks expedited discovery to uncover the identity of the unknown John Doe ("Doe") defendant. Ingenuity's lawsuit bears a striking resemblance to the many copyright infringement actions appearing before the court in 2011.<sup>1</sup> Like the plaintiffs in those cases, Ingenuity is suing the defendant, known only by an Internet Protocol ("IP") address, for illegally downloading and sharing on a peer-to-peer network a film of the adult entertainment variety.<sup>2</sup> And, like those plaintiffs, Ingenuity has made an ex parte application to the court to serve a subpoena on the Internet Service Provider ("ISP") that provided internet access to Doe to turn over identifying information.

<sup>2</sup> Ingenuity shares with at least one previous plaintiff, Boy Racer, Inc., both counsel and the declarant to an affidavit submitted with the pending motion.

In the affidavit supporting its application, Ingenuity's declarant, Peter Hansmeier, points out that expedited discovery is necessary because ISPs regularly dispose of the identifying information attached to IP addresses. Mr. Hansmeier assures the court that the ISP can provide Ingenuity with the name, street address, and at least one email address for Doe based on the IP address alone. In light of its substantial experience with these types of discovery requests,<sup>3</sup> the court is – to put it mildly – skeptical that this discovery will permit the identification of Doe and service in compliance with Fed. R. Civ. P. 4. Nevertheless, Ingenuity has avoided the misjoinder morass of many of its predecessors.<sup>4</sup> Without binding Ingenuity to the representations of its predecessors, the overlap in its agents notwithstanding, the court finds Ingenuity has made a sufficient showing. The court reminds Ingenuity that its expedited request is limited to the ISP it identified in its moving papers and reminds counsel that the court is not inclined to allow further discovery if the ISP fails to provide information adequate to the task at hand.<sup>5</sup>

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that Ingenuity is allowed to serve immediate discovery on Doe's ISP listed in Exhibit A to the Complaint by serving a Rule 45 subpoena that seeks information sufficient to identify Doe, including the name, addresses, telephone numbers, and email addresses of Doe. Ingenuity's counsel shall include a copy of this order.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the ISP will have 30 days from the date of service upon it to serve Doe with a copy of the subpoena and a copy of this order. The ISP may serve Doe using any reasonable means, including written notice sent to Doe's last known address, transmitted either by first-class mail or via overnight service. The ISP and Doe each shall have 30 days from the date of service to file any motions in this court contesting the subpoena (including a motion to quash or
