During the course of prior litigations between the parties, prior court orders determined that "information pertaining to [plaintiffs'] construction, builder's risk, auto, or pollution insurance" is not relevant to the parties' disputes. Id. Plaintiff has produced responsive documents with this non-relevant information redacted.

Plaintiffs' position is that because the information is highly commercially sensitive and not relevant (as established by court order), plaintiff may redact it. Defendants' position is that the plaintiff cannot unilaterally redact information from responsive documents, and the prior court orders do not address redactions within responsive documents. Both parties agree that the redacted information is not relevant, but defendants question the propriety of the redactions. Id. at 6.

Accordingly, to balance the plaintiffs' concern that the irrelevant information will be disclosed to their competitors, and defendants' concern that plaintiffs are over-redacting, the court orders plaintiffs to produce the unredacted, responsive documents subject to an attorneys-eyes only designation, at plaintiffs' counsels' office (or similar mutually agreed on location) for review by defendants' attorneys. The unredacted documents shall include highlighting or a similar indication to allow defendants' attorneys to readily identify the redacted information. See also Civ. L. R. 79-5(d)(1)(D). The documents shall not be removed from the reviewing location. The purpose of the review is limited to allowing defendants' attorneys to confirm that the redactions are limited to "information pertaining to construction, builder's risk, auto, or pollution insurance" only.
