

not required, the complaint must include sufficient facts to afford the defendants fair notice of the claims and the grounds upon which they are based and to demonstrate a right to relief. Bell Atlantic v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 1964-65 (2007)). Conclusory allegations are not sufficient. Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949 (2009). The plaintiff must plead “enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.” Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570. But “[a] document filed pro se is to be liberally construed and a pro se complaint, however inartfully pleaded, must be held to less stringent standards than formal pleadings drafted by lawyers.” Boykin v. KeyCorp, 521 F.3d 202, 214 (2d Cir. 2008) (quoting Erickson v. Pardus, 127 S. Ct. 2197, 2200 (2007)).

Riddick states that he has mental health problems and frequently harms himself. In the complaint, he describes four separate incidents. On October 29, 2010, Riddick was sprayed with a chemical agent despite being asthmatic, confined in four-point restraints in a sensory deprivation cell and forcibly medicated with psychotropic drugs. On December 20, 2010, he again was confined in a sensory deprivation cell with in-cell and four-point restraints and no mental health care. On January 4-5, 2011, Riddick alleges that he was subjected to a chemical agent without a mental health evaluation, confined in a sensory deprivation cell under four-point restraints, not prevented from harming himself, not provided mental health assistance, and forcibly medicated. He also contends that his personal property was discarded while he was so confined. Finally, on April 29, 2011, Riddick alleges that he was assaulted during a cell extraction. Riddick alleges that the defendants either directly participated in the incidents or stood by and failed to intercede on his behalf.

After careful consideration, the court concludes that the allegations warrant service of the complaint and an opportunity for the plaintiff to address the defendants' response to the his Eighth Amendment claims.
