Re: Leader Technologies, Inc. v. Facebook, Inc., C. A. No. 08-862-LPS

Dear Judge Stark:

Leader Technologies writes in response to Facebook's January 28, 2011 letter because, for a variety of reasons, the case it cites, Centillion Data Systems, LLC v. Qwest Communication, Inc., 2011 WL 167036 (Fed. Cir. Jan. 20, 2011), is not relevant supplemental authority to any pending issue before this Court. The most obvious reason is that the scope of the claims in Centillion is directed to an entirely different type of system than the one in the pending case. The claims in Centillion are directed to a system containing "both a 'back-end system' maintained by the service provider...and a 'front-end' system maintained by an end user." Id. at *1. This limitation is specifically set forth in the claims which require a "personal computer data processing means" as the front-end system. Id.

In contrast, the asserted claims in this case are only directed to back-end systems, such as those maintained by Facebook on its servers. For example, Claim 1 of the Patent-in-Suit (U.S. Patent No. 7,139,761) is directed to a "computer-implemented network-based system" that contains a "context component" and a "tracking component." Both of these components are located on the back-end servers and not on the front-end. Because the asserted claims in this case do not require any front-end components, such as a "personal computer data processing means," Centillion is irrelevant to any pending issue before the Court.

Accordingly, Facebook's unsolicited communication should be given no weight because the case it cites is not applicable to any pending issue.
