The average woman's ability to get pregnant slows before age 30 and steeply declines after she hits 40. In fact, women past the age of 42 rarely conceive a child using their own eggs, says Dr. Samuel Pang, medical director of the Reproductive Science Center of New England. But you might not know that by looking around Hollywood. That's because many, including Marcia Cross and Geena Davis, became moms later in life. They join a long list of star moms giving birth after 40, though they don't always share how they did it.
