

a copy of an amended pleading, motion, order or other paper from which it may first be ascertained that the case is one which is or has become removable.” 28 U.S.C. § 1446(b). The defendants argue that they first learned this case was removable on July 8, 2010, when they received plaintiff’s answers to their requests for admissions, in which he denied that his damages did not exceed $75,000. Def.’s Opp’n 4. However, plaintiff’s initial complaint claimed $100,000 in compensatory damages and $100,000 in punitive damages. Even disregarding punitive damages—which “may generally be included when calculating the amount in controversy under 28 U.S.C. § 1332(a),” Wexler v. United Air Lines, Inc., 496 F. Supp. 2d 150, 154 (D.D.C. 2007) (citation omitted)—an amount in controversy in excess of $75,000 was readily apparent from plaintiff’s complaint. Accordingly, because the removal was untimely, plaintiff’s motion to remand is GRANTED. However, because the Court is not prepared to conclude, based on the record, that the defendants lacked an objectively reasonable basis for removing this action, plaintiff’s request for sanctions is DENIED.

For the foregoing reasons, it is hereby

ORDERED that the plaintiff’s Motion to Remand [#7] is GRANTED. It is further ORDERED that the above-captioned action be remanded to the Superior Court of the District of Columbia.

SO ORDERED.
