SCOTTSDALE CAPITAL ADVISORS
CORPORATION and ALPINE SECURITIES
CORPORATION,

Plaintiffs,

v.

FINANCIAL INDUSTRY REGULATORY AUTHORITY, INC.,

Defendant,

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Intervenor Defendant.

Civil Action No. 23-1506 (BAH)

Judge Beryl A. Howell

MEMORANDUM OPINION

Plaintiffs Scottsdale Capital Advisors Corporation (“SCA”) and Alpine Securities Corporation (“Alpine”) originally filed suit in the Middle District of Florida asserting several constitutional challenges to the operation and structure of the Financial Industry Regulatory Authority, Inc. (“FINRA”), a private corporation responsible for regulating broker-dealers in the securities industry. As litigation proceeded in that case, FINRA expedited an enforcement action against Alpine, alleging that this company committed thousands of violations of a permanent FINRA order to cease-and-desist certain conduct, which conduct required Alpine’s immediate expulsion from FINRA’s membership and thus the securities industry. Alpine coins that punishment “the corporate death penalty” given that such expulsion would necessitate a complete closure of Alpine’s business and operations. Pls.’ Second Am. Compl. (“SAC”) ¶¶ 10, 129, ECF No. 43.

Weeks before the expedited enforcement action’s scheduled hearing before FINRA, Alpine sought an emergency preliminary injunction from the district court in the Middle District of Florida, seeking to halt the expedited enforcement proceeding pending resolution of Alpine’s constitutional challenges. After briefing and oral argument on the motion, however, the case was transferred to this Court for resolution—only two business days before the FINRA hearing. The day before the scheduled hearing, Alpine then renewed its emergency motion seeking a preliminary injunction or temporary restraining order (“TRO”). Alpine also seeks reconsideration of an earlier order of this Court denying its original emergency motion as filed in the Middle District of Florida.

Upon consideration of Alpine’s two pending motions, extensive briefing, oral argument, and the entire record herein, Alpine’s motion for reconsideration is granted and its emergency motion for a preliminary injunction or TRO is denied.

I. BACKGROUND

The factual background and procedural history of this case is briefly recounted below.

A. Legal Landscape

The Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (“the Exchange Act”), as amended in 1938, created a complex statutory regime “of cooperative self-regulation” of so-called over-the-counter securities markets. See United States v. NASD, 422 U.S. 694, 700 n.6 (1975). That scheme permits private entities, known as self-regulatory organizations (“SROs”), to perform a supervisory role over the securities industry, subject to oversight from the Securities and Exchange Commission (“SEC” or “the Commission”). See 15 U.S.C. § 78s (describing the SEC’s oversight role over SROs). Brokers and dealers transacting in the securities industry may not do so without registering with the SEC and joining a national securities association. See id. §

78o(a)(1), (b)(1). The only national securities association currently registered with the SEC is defendant FINRA. See id. § 78o-3 (describing the requirement for registration of a national securities association).

1. FINRA’s Corporate Structure

FINRA is a Delaware not-for-profit corporation and SEC-registered national securities association that conducts business in the District of Columbia. See SAC ¶¶ 30–31. Following its formation from a 2007 consolidation between its predecessor, the National Association of Securities Dealers (“NASD”), and the enforcement arm of the New York Stock Exchange (“NYSE”), id. ¶ 40; see also Order Approving Proposed Rule Change to Amend the By-Laws of NASD, 72 Fed. Reg. 42,169 (Aug. 1, 2007), FINRA is governed by a board of twenty-two members, comprised of industry and non-industry members and FINRA’s chief executive officer (“CEO”), which board oversees the organization’s management and administration, see SAC ¶ 42–43. Board members are selected by FINRA’s members and are removable only by a majority vote of FINRA’s board or, “in very limited and specific circumstances, the SEC,” and thus no Board member or the CEO is appointed by the SEC, the U.S. President, Congress, or any other governmental body. Id. ¶¶ 57–58; see also 72 Fed. Reg. at 42,170–72.¹ At the next level of management, FINRA executives are appointed and removed by the board, see SAC ¶ 59, with no involvement by the SEC or any other government official or body. FINRA’s funding is derived “almost exclusively” through membership fees as well as fines, penalties, and sanctions, id. ¶ 52, with its budget set “without any constraint or legislative cap” because FINRA receives no government funding, id. ¶ 51. See also FINRA By-Laws art. VI § 1 (Power of the Corporation to Fix and Levy Assessments), <https://www.finra.org/rules-guidance/rulebooks/corporate-organization/power-corporation-fix-and-levy-assessments> [<https://perma.cc/PB84-KUXL>]. Part of that budget includes salaries for FINRA’s executives, as determined by the organization itself. See id. ¶ 53.

2. FINRA’s Rules

FINRA’s supervisory duties over its membership—including roughly 3,400 brokerage firms, 150,000 branch offices, and 610,000 individual registered securities representatives—is varied. See id. ¶ 41. While FINRA promulgates its own rules and standards and enforces compliance with those rules through administering sanctions and barring individuals from FINRA membership, see id. ¶ 50, this supervisory authority is subject to the SEC’s oversight and control, Turbeville v. FINRA, 874 F.3d 1268, 1270 (11th Cir. 2017). For instance, the SEC may limit FINRA’s operations or registration if FINRA violates a statute or SEC regulation. See 15 U.S.C. § 78s(h)(1). Suspension or revocation of that registration is subject to the SEC’s opinion that such action “is necessary or appropriate in the public interest, for the protection of investors, or otherwise in furtherance of the purposes of [the Exchange Act].” Id. The SEC also reviews and approves rules proposed by FINRA, see id. § 78s(b)–(c), with SEC approval a prerequisite for the majority of such rules, see id. § 78s(b)(1).² At any time and as “deem[ed] necessary or ² The Exchange Act permits three avenues for promulgation of a FINRA rule without the SEC’s express approval: (i) a rule designated by FINRA “as . . . constituting a stated policy, practice, or interpretation with respect to the meaning, administration, or enforcement of an existing [FINRA] rule[;] . . . establishing or changing a due, fee, or other charge imposed by [FINRA;] . . . [or] concerned solely with the administration of [FINRA] or other matters[;]” 15 U.S.C. § 78s(b)(3)(A); (ii) a rule that “appears to the Commission . . . is necessary for the protection of investors, the maintenance of fair and orderly markets, or the safeguarding of securities or funds[;]” id. § 78s(b)(3)(B); and (iii) a rule on which the SEC does not act within a specified time are “deemed to have been approved[;]” id. § 78s(b)(2)(D). In either of the first two scenarios, within 60 days of the proposed rule’s filing, the SEC “summarily may temporarily suspend the change in the rules . . . if it appears to the Commission that such action is necessary or appropriate in the public interest, for the protection of investors, or otherwise in furtherance of the purposes of this chapter.” Id. § 78s(b)(3)(C). In such an instance, the SEC shall hold proceedings to determine whether the proposed rule shall be approved. See id.

appropriate[,]” the SEC may also “abrogate, add to, and delete from” any FINRA rule “to insure the fair administration of the self-regulatory organization, to conform its rules to requirements of [the Exchange Act] and the rules and regulations thereunder applicable to such organization, or otherwise in furtherance of the purposes of [the Act].” Id. § 78s(c).

3. FINRA’s Enforcement Regime

Enforcement proceedings result from FINRA’s investigation into alleged misconduct by its members, and such investigations are done at FINRA’s discretion, without any influence from the SEC or other branch of government. See SAC ¶ 55; see also 15 U.S.C. § 78o-3(b)(8). In fact, “[i]nvolvement by SEC commissioners in this onerous and impactful process occurs only when—and if—a target of an investigation survives the investigation, prosecution, and internal appeal process.” SAC ¶ 55. FINRA takes enforcement action against individuals or entities that violate a FINRA rule, SEC regulation, or statutory provision. See 15 U.S.C. § 78o-3(b)(7). Enforcement proceedings begin with FINRA filing a complaint against a targeted entity, providing notice to that entity of the specific charges. See FINRA Rule 9211 (Aug. 3, 2018), <https://www.finra.org/rules-guidance/rulebooks/finra-rules/9211> [<https://perma.cc/3RM6-F9MF>] (Authorization of Complaint). A FINRA hearing panel then conducts an evidentiary hearing, in which the entity may present arguments over multiple days. See 15 U.S.C. § 78o-3(h)(1); see also id. § 78o-3(b)(8) (requiring registered national securities associations to employ fair disciplinary procedures); FINRA Rule 9231 (June 4, 2020), <https://www.finra.org/rules-guidance/rulebooks/finra-rules/9231> [<https://perma.cc/SVL6-8HZ2>] (Appointment by the Chief Hearing Officer of Hearing Panel or Extended Hearing Panel or Replacement Hearing Officer). The panel then issues a statement of decision with findings. See 15 U.S.C. § 78o-3(h)(1)(A)–(C); see also FINRA Rule 9268 (Nov. 2, 2015), [5](https://www.finra.org/rules-

guidance/rulebooks/finra-rules/9268 [<https://perma.cc/72SL-T7UW>] (Decision of Hearing Panel or Extended Hearing Panel).

An aggrieved party may appeal that decision to FINRA’s National Adjudicatory Council (“NAC”), which “may affirm, dismiss, modify, or reverse with respect to each finding.” FINRA Rule 9348 (Nov. 2, 2015), <https://www.finra.org/rules-guidance/rulebooks/finra-rules/9348> [<https://perma.cc/PWN9-TWS6>] (Powers of the National Adjudicatory Council on Review). The NAC may also review the panel decision sua sponte. See FINRA Rule 9312 (Apr. 15, 2021), <https://www.finra.org/rules-guidance/rulebooks/finra-rules/9312> [<https://perma.cc/74ZK-Q75W>] (Review Proceeding Initiated by Adjudicatory Council). Such an appeal operates as a stay of the panel’s decision pending NAC’s decision. See FINRA Rule 9311 (Apr. 15, 2021), <https://www.finra.org/rules-guidance/rulebooks/finra-rules/9311> [<https://perma.cc/BQ58-TCQT>] (Appeal by Any Party; Cross-Appeal). A NAC decision may then be appealed to the SEC, see 15 U.S.C. § 78s(d)(2), which conducts de novo review and may consider evidence not previously considered by FINRA, see Commission Rule of Practice 452, 17 C.F.R. § 201.452.

Final decisions by the SEC are subject to review by a federal appellate court with the filing of a petition by an aggrieved party, see 15 U.S.C. § 78y, but FINRA itself may not seek judicial review of an SEC decision contrary to a FINRA ruling, see generally NASD v. SEC, 431 F.3d 803, 812 (D.C. Cir. 2005).

B. FINRA’s Enforcement Action Against Plaintiff

Plaintiffs are broker-dealers and registered FINRA members, both owned by the same parent holding company. See SAC ¶¶ 28–29; Transcript of Hearing (June 1, 2023) (“Hr’g Tr.”) at 9:17–23.³ As early as 2019, FINRA received complaints from customers of Alpine alleging that the firm charged a significant monthly account fee. See FINRA’s Opp’n to Pl.’s Renewed Mot. for Preliminary Injunction and Temporary Restraining Order (“FINRA’s TRO Opp’n”), Ex. A, March 22, 2022 Extended Hearing Panel Decision, Dep’t of Enf’t v. Alpine Sec. Corp., FINRA Disciplinary Proceeding No. 2019061232601 (“March 2022 Panel Decision”) at 2, ECF No. 70-1. On March 22, 2022, a FINRA hearing panel found that Alpine “converted and misused customer funds and securities, engaged in unauthorized trading, charged and paid customers unfair prices in securities transactions, charged customers unreasonable and discriminatory fees, and made an unauthorized capital withdrawal.” March 2022 Panel Decision at 1. For Alpine’s violations, the panel ordered Alpine’s expulsion from FINRA’s membership, payment of restitution in an amount exceeding $4 million, and a “permanent cease and desist order.” Id. Alpine then appealed that panel decision to the NAC, which appeal had the effect of staying the expulsion and restitution sanctions but the “permanent cease and desist order” took immediate effect, in accordance with the explicit use of this term in the panel decision and governing FINRA rules. See FINRA’s TRO Opp’n at 3–4; see also FINRA Rule 9311(b) (“Any such appeal, however, will not stay a decision, or that part of a decision, that imposes a permanent cease and desist order.”).

³ Neither plaintiff is a stranger to FINRA enforcement proceedings. See, e.g., FINRA’s Opp’n to Pl.’s Renewed Mot. for Preliminary Injunction and Temporary Restraining Order (“FINRA’s TRO Opp’n”) at 3, ECF

During the pendency of the NAC appeal, FINRA discovered that Alpine failed to comply with the permanent cease-and-desist order that had not been stayed pending Alpine’s appeal to the NAC. See FINRA’s TRO Opp’n at 4. After a months’ long investigation, FINRA determined that Alpine violated the cease-and-desist order “more than 35,000 times by charging customers millions of dollars in unreasonable, unfair, and unlawful fees and commissions.” Id. Notably, Alpine does not contest that position, but rather counters that its actions were not improper. See SAC ¶ 127. As a result, on April 19, 2023, FINRA initiated an expedited enforcement proceeding (“Enforcement Proceeding”) to expel Alpine from FINRA membership and stop its continued improper conduct, a punishment characterized by plaintiffs as “the corporate death penalty.” See FINRA’s TRO Opp’n at 4; SAC ¶¶ 126–129. The Enforcement Proceeding was scheduled for May 31, 2023. See Alpine’s Renewed Emergency Mot. for a Preliminary Injunction & Temporary Restraining Order (“Pl.’s TRO Mot.”) at 2, ECF No. 66. At a hearing before this Court, held on June 1, 2023, Alpine disclosed that the FINRA hearing officer postponed the Enforcement Proceeding until June 5, 2023, pending resolution of Alpine’s motion for equitable relief, described below. See Hr’g Tr. at 7:13–16.

No. 70 (“Alpine is a broker-dealer member of FINRA . . . and has been disciplined multiple times for violating FINRA rules.”). For example, in the complaint, plaintiffs mention an effort by FINRA to SCA “for supposed violations of Section 5 of the Securities Act.” SAC ¶ 115. FINRA’s investigation into SCA began in March 2015 and concluded in September 2021 when the SEC set aside FINRA’s findings and the NAC’s affirmance that SCA violated the charged statutes. See id. ¶¶ 116–119; see also In the Matter of the Application of Scottsdale Capital Advisors Corp., Release No. 93052, 2021 WL 4242630, at *9 (S.E.C. Sept. 17, 2021).

C. Procedural History in Federal Court

Plaintiffs filed their initial complaint in the Middle District of Florida on October 12, 2022, see Compl., ECF No. 1, then amended that complaint on February 3, 2023, see First Am. Compl., ECF No. 27. The government intervened on February 6, 2023, see Notice of Intervention by the United States of America, ECF No. 28, shortly before FINRA moved to dismiss the first amended complaint on March 10, 2023, with the government’s support, see FINRA’s Mot. Dismiss Pls.’ Am. Compl., ECF No. 35; Gov’t’s Mem. of Law in Defense of the Challenged Provisions of the Federal Securities Law, ECF No. 37. Before FINRA’s dismissal motion was fully briefed, the Supreme Court issued Axon Enterprise Inc. v. FTC, 143 S. Ct. 890 (2023), which plaintiffs now claim is relevant to the relief they seek in their complaint.

Five days after Axon’s issuance, FINRA initiated the Enforcement Proceeding against Alpine on April 19, 2023. See SAC ¶ 126. Plaintiffs quickly filed the operative second amended complaint on April 28, 2023, in response to Axon, see SAC, and then approximately a week later, Alpine filed an emergency motion for a preliminary injunction on May 9, 2023, seeking to halt the Enforcement Proceeding then scheduled for May 31, 2023, see Pl.’s Emergency Mot. for Preliminary Injunction, ECF No. 45. The assigned Judge in the Middle District of Florida held a three-hour hearing on the motion on May 22, 2023, see Min. Entry (May 22, 2023), and, two days later, ordered the transfer of this case to this Court, see Order, ECF No. 62. That transfer took effect at approximately noon on Friday, May 26, 2023—two business days before the scheduled Enforcement Proceeding. See Case Transfer, ECF No. 63.

Upon being assigned this case, this Court denied, without prejudice, Alpine’s emergency motion for preliminary injunction and FINRA’s motion to dismiss because the materials filed relied on out-of-circuit, nonbinding case law mostly from the Fifth and Eleventh Circuits that was unfit for consideration of such extraordinary equitable relief on a truncated timeline. See Min. Order (May 26, 2023).⁴ The parties were directed to propose a briefing schedule by the next business day, Tuesday, May 30, 2023. See Min. Order (May 26, 2023). On May 30, 2023, Alpine moved for reconsideration of the Order denying, without prejudice, its emergency preliminary injunction motion, ECF No. 65, as well as renewed its emergency motion for a preliminary injunction and temporary restraining order, ECF No. 66, prompting entry of a highly expedited briefing schedule, see Min. Order (May 30, 2023), for briefing to be completed by 9 p.m. on May 30, 2023, see Gov’t’s Third Mem. in Defense of the Challenged Provisions of the Federal Securities Laws (“Gov’t’s Opp’n”), ECF No. 68; FINRA’s Opp’n to Pl.’s Mot. for Reconsideration (“FINRA’s Reconsideration Opp’n”), ECF No. 69; FINRA’s Opp’n to Pl.’s Renewed Mot. for Preliminary Injunction & Temporary Restraining Order (“FINRA’s TRO

⁴ The Court also signaled to the parties that exhaustion before the SEC may not have been met in this case according to the D.C. Circuit’s ruling in Springsteen-Abbott v. SEC, 989 F.3d 4, 7–8 (D.C. Cir. 2021).

Order (May 31, 2023), Min. Entry (June 1, 2023).

At the hearing, the parties were directed to submit any supplemental briefs regarding the consequences should FINRA be deemed a state actor, as plaintiffs urged, and the validity of plaintiffs' First Amendment claim. See Min. Order (June 1, 2023). Following submission of those memoranda, see Gov't's Supp. Br. in Resp. to the Court's June 1, 2023 Min. Order ("Gov't's Supp. Br."), ECF No. 82; FINRA's Supp. Br. in Opp'n to Pl.'s Renewed Emergency Mot. for Preliminary Injunction and Temporary Restraining Order ("FINRA's Supp. Br."), ECF No. 83; Pl.'s Supp. Br. in Supp. of Renewed Emergency Mot. for Preliminary Injunction and Temporary Restraining Order ("Pl.'s Supp. Br."), ECF No. 84; Pl.'s Supp. Resp. Br. in Supp. of Renewed Emergency Mot. for Preliminary Injunction and Temporary Restraining Order ("Pl.'s Supp. Reply"), ECF No. 85; FINRA's Resp. to Supp. Br. of Alpine ("FINRA's Supp. Reply"), ECF No. 86, plaintiff's motions are now ripe for consideration.

II. LEGAL STANDARD

A temporary restraining order ("TRO") "is an extraordinary remedy that should be granted only when the party seeking the relief, by a clear showing, carries the burden of persuasion." Cobell v. Norton, 391 F.3d 251, 258 (D.C. Cir. 2004). An application for a TRO is analyzed using the same factors applicable to a request for preliminary injunctive relief. See, e.g., Gordon v. Holder, 632 F.3d 722, 723–24 (D.C. Cir. 2011) (applying the preliminary injunction standard to a district court decision denying a motion for TRO and preliminary injunction). Preliminary injunctive relief is similarly “an extraordinary remedy that may only be awarded upon a clear showing that the plaintiff is entitled to such relief.” Sherley v. Sebelius, 644 F.3d 388, 392 (D.C. Cir. 2011) (quoting Winter v. Nat. Res. Def. Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 22 (2008)); see also Mazurek v. Armstrong, 520 U.S. 968, 972 (1997) (per curiam) (“[A] preliminary injunction is an extraordinary and drastic remedy, one that should not be granted unless the movant, by a clear showing, carries the burden of persuasion.” (internal quotation marks omitted)).

A plaintiff seeking preliminary injunctive relief must establish the following four factors: “that he is likely to succeed on the merits, that he is likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief, that the balance of equities tips in his favor, and that an injunction is in the public interest.” Ramirez v. Collier, 142 S. Ct. 1264, 1275 (2022) (quoting Winter, 555 U.S. at 20); see also Archdiocese of Wash. v. Wash. Metro. Area Transit Auth., 897 F.3d 314, 321 (D.C. Cir. 2018); Aamer v. Obama, 742 F.3d 1023, 1038 (D.C. Cir. 2014). The balance of equities and the public interest factors “merge” when the government is the opposing party. Karem v. Trump, 960 F.3d 656, 668 (D.C. Cir. 2020). When seeking such relief, “the movant has the burden to show that all four factors, taken together, weigh in favor of the injunction.” Abdullah v. Obama, 753 F.3d 193, 197 (D.C. Cir. 2014) (quoting Davis v. Pension Benefit Guar. Corp., 571 F.3d 1288, 1292 (D.C. Cir. 2009)) (internal quotation marks omitted).⁵

⁵ The D.C. Circuit has in the past used a so-called “sliding scale” approach to evaluating the four preliminary injunction and TRO factors such that, “[i]f the movant makes an unusually strong showing on one of the factors, then it does not necessarily have to make as strong a showing on another factor.” Davis v. Pension Benefit Guar. Corp., 571 F.3d 1288, 1291–92 (D.C. Cir. 2009). While acknowledging that this approach is, at a minimum, in tension with current Supreme Court jurisprudence requiring a persuasive showing on all four factors, the D.C. Circuit has not resolved the continuing viability of the sliding-scale approach. See, e.g., Changji Esquel Textile Co. v. Raimondo, 40 F.4th 716, 726 (D.C. Cir. 2022) (reserving “the question whether the sliding-scale approach remains valid”); cf. Davis, 571 F.3d at 1295–96 (Kavanaugh, J., concurring) (noting that “this Circuit’s traditional sliding-scale approach to preliminary injunctions may be difficult to square with the Supreme Court’s recent decisions in” Winter and Munaf v. Geren, 553 U.S. 674 (2008)).

Preliminary injunctive relief and TROs are not remedies “awarded as of right,” but “[a]s a matter of equitable discretion, a preliminary injunction does not [even] follow as a matter of course from a plaintiff’s showing of a likelihood of success on the merits.” Benisek v. Lamone, 138 S. Ct. 1942, 1943–44 (2018). Rather, a court must be persuaded as to all four factors. Moreover, “a party requesting a preliminary injunction must generally show reasonable diligence.” Id. at 1944.

III. DISCUSSION

While the focus of the pending motion for injunctive relief is to stall the pending Enforcement Proceeding against Alpine, plaintiffs’ complaint is far more sweeping to challenge the “unconstitutional operation and structure of FINRA.” SAC ¶ 1; accord id. at 33. Specifically, plaintiffs lodge six claims against FINRA: (1) that “FINRA’s wide-ranging exercise of executive power is immune from Presidential supervision or control[,]” namely that FINRA’s board “are afforded multi-level protection from removal thus impeding the President’s ability to oversee the officers executing the laws of the United States in violation of the Constitution’s separations of powers[,]” id. ¶¶ 141–151 (Count I); (2) that FINRA’s board members are “officers of the United States whose appointments must comply with the Appointments Clause of the United States Constitution” and presently do not, id. ¶¶ 152–157 (Count II); (3) that the Exchange Act “improperly and unconstitutionally delegates legislative power to [FINRA] outside the Legislative Branch,” regardless of whether this entity functions as a state actor or private entity, id. ¶¶ 158–161 (Count III); (4) that the Exchange Act’s requirement that firms “join FINRA violates Plaintiffs’ First Amendment right not to associate[,]” id. ¶¶ 162–171 (Count IV); (5) that “FINRA’s disciplinary proceedings are biased, secretive, and fail to implement rules that maintain the integrity [of] the proceedings,” in violation of the Due Process

Clause of the Fifth Amendment, id. ¶¶ 172–176 (Count V); and (6) that “broker-dealers are not afforded the right to a trial by jury” during FINRA proceedings, in violation of the Seventh Amendment, id. ¶¶ 177–180 (Count VI).

Upon review of multiple papers filed by all parties and consideration of the arguments presented at the June 1, 2023, hearing before this Court, plaintiff’s motion for reconsideration is granted. As refiled, plaintiff’s motion for preliminary injunction and TRO properly cites binding law of this Circuit and correctly queues the issues for this Court’s consideration.

Alpine has, however, failed to show a likelihood of success on the merits of plaintiffs’ claims because FINRA is likely not a state actor, obviating all but one of plaintiffs’ constitutional claims, and their surviving First Amendment claim likely lacks merit. Plaintiffs also likely do not assert a viable nondelegation doctrine claim. In reality, plaintiffs offer a multitude of critiques of FINRA throughout their complaint as disgruntled members of FINRA; however, those criticisms fall far short of amounting to likely sustainable constitutional challenges to the structure and processes of FINRA.

While, if expelled from FINRA, Alpine is sure to suffer from the forced closure of its business, such irreparable harm was of Alpine’s own making by apparently viewing the permanent cease-and-desist order issued as part of the March 2022 Panel Decision as stayed pending appeal. See SAC ¶¶ 8–10 (acknowledging that the Enforcement Proceeding is “based on Alpine’s alleged failure to comply with an order contained in an Initial Hearing Panel Decision that was issued in a prior lengthy FINRA action,” but arguing “[h]owever, [such] Decision does not become final or effective unless and until it is affirmed by FINRA’s appellate tribunal, the [NAC]. And that has not occurred . . . and no [NAC] decision has issued”). Ignoring the immediate effectiveness of a permanent cease-and-desist order, due to operation of an explicit FINRA rule, see March 2022 Panel Decision (using term “permanent cease and desist order”); FINRA Rule 9311(b), is notable context in assessing the irreparable harm claimed by Alpine. Further, given Alpine’s unlikelihood of success in urging novel constitutional attacks on FINRA’s structure and operations, reliance on the “here-and-now injury” of being subject to the Enforcement Proceeding, as defined by Axon, simply is insufficient to justify the extraordinary equitable relief requested. This conclusion is confirmed in assessing the balance of equities, which falls heavily in defendants’ favor because the harm of permitting Alpine to continue its allegedly knowing violation of FINRA rules to the detriment of its customers, the securities industry, and the public must be given great weight.

Having failed on all factors for injunctive relief, as detailed below, Alpine’s motion is denied.

A. Likelihood of Success on the Merits

Plaintiffs’ separation of powers, Appointments Clause, Fifth Amendment, and Seventh Amendment claims are unlikely to succeed because FINRA is most likely not a state actor. That aside, as either a public or private entity, FINRA’s structure and processes also likely do not violate the private nondelegation doctrine. Finally, plaintiffs’ First Amendment claim is likely to fail because a compelling interest supports the Exchange Act’s FINRA membership mandate and supersedes plaintiffs’ right to expressive association. Thus, plaintiffs’ claims are unlikely to succeed on the merits.

1. FINRA Is Not a State Actor

“As a matter of substantive constitutional law the state-action requirement reflects judicial recognition of the fact that ‘most rights secured by the Constitution are protected only against infringement by governments.’” Lugar v. Edmonson Oil Co., Inc., 457 U.S. 922, 936

(1982) (quoting Flagg Bros. Inc. v. Brooks, 436 U.S. 149, 156 (1978)). That said, the Supreme Court has held, “many times, that actions of private entities can sometimes be regarded as governmental action for constitutional purposes.” Lebron v. Nat’l R.R. Passenger Corp., 513 U.S. 374, 378 (1995) (collecting cases).

Whether an entity is a state actor is largely a “fact-bound inquiry.” Lugar, 457 U.S. at 939. While the Supreme Court “has articulated a number of different factors or tests in different contexts” to determine state action, id., some key considerations remain consistent. Cf. Brentwood Acad. v. Tenn. Secondary Sch. Athletic Ass’n, 531 U.S. 288, 295 (2001) (“From the range of circumstances that could point toward the State behind an individual face, no one fact can function as a necessary condition across the board for finding state action; nor is any set of circumstances absolutely sufficient[.]”). A court must consider if “there is such a close nexus between the State and the challenged action that seemingly private behavior may be fairly treated as that of the State itself.” NB ex rel. Peacock v. District of Columbia, 794 F.3d 31, 43 (D.C. Cir. 2015) (quoting Brentwood, 531 U.S. at 295); accord Jackson v. Metro. Edison Co., 419 U.S. 345, 351 (1974) (“[T]he inquiry must be whether there is a sufficiently close nexus between the State and the challenged action of the regulated entity so that the action of the latter may be fairly treated as that of the State itself.”).

Determining a sufficient nexus involves assessing, among other things, the government’s “exercise of ‘coercive power,’” Brentwood, 531 U.S. at 296 (quoting Blum v. Yaretsky, 457 U.S. 991, 1004 (1982)), which has been described variously as the government’s provision of “significant encouragement, either overt or covert,” id. (quoting Blum, 457 U.S. at 1004), and the degree of government control over the entity, id. (citing Pennsylvania v. Bd. of Dirs. of City Trusts of Phila., 353 U.S. 230, 231 (1957)), as well as the private entity’s “willful” participation in a joint activity with the government, id. (quoting Lugar, 457 U.S. at 941), including the extent to which a public function is delegated to a private entity, id., and how “entwined with governmental policies” the private entity is or the degree to which the government is “entwined in [the private entity’s] management or control,” id. (quoting Evans v. Newton, 382 U.S. 296, 299, 301 (1966)). An earlier Supreme Court decision also relied on two considerations for state action: (1) whether the private entity acted pursuant to “some right or privilege created by the State or by a rule of conduct imposed by the state or by a person for whom the State is responsible” and (2) whether the actor is “a person who may fairly be said to be a state actor” or state official, an individual working with a state official, or an individual whose “conduct is otherwise chargeable to the State.” Lugar, 457 U.S. at 937.⁶

Employing all these considerations to the facts at hand, plaintiff has not proven the likelihood that FINRA is a state actor. First, the facts of FINRA’s creation, operation, and oversight structure do not indicate state actor status. FINRA is a private organization incorporated under the laws of Delaware; neither an act of Congress nor the SEC created FINRA. Cf. Blount v. SEC, 61 F.3d 938, 941 (D.C. Cir. 1995) (holding that the Municipal Securities Rulemaking Board was a state actor because, inter alia, it was “created by an act of Congress”); Lugar, 457 U.S. 941–42 (holding that respondents acted “under color of state law” in depriving petitioner of his property pursuant to state law and joint participation with state officials in such deprivation). No government entity funds FINRA nor plays any role in the selection of its board members or officers, and those individuals are in no way characterized as governmental officers. Cf. Brentwood, 531 U.S. at 298–302 (finding that the school athletic association was a state actor because, inter alia, state board members sat on the association’s governing bodies and public-school officials participated in the state retirement system, such that public institutions and public school officials were sufficiently entwined in the association). FINRA is self-governing; it creates its own rules and standards, including the setting of salaries of its officers and penalty amounts unilaterally. Cf. Lebron, 513 U.S. at 394–99 (finding that Amtrak was a state actor because it had the same objectives as the government, was created by the government, and functioned under the government’s control such that “the corporation is part of the Government”).

FINRA also aims to perform functions that are neither contemplated nor shared by the SEC, including, to name a few, administering broker qualifications examinations, see Turbeville, 874 F.3d at 1271, “conduct[ing] inspections of brokers and dealers,” and enforcing compliance with professional industry standards as well as FINRA’s own rules and regulations, SAC ¶ 49. In FINRA’s adjudicative capacity, this SRO alone determines which cases to investigate and when to file a complaint, and any decision that FINRA makes is not binding on the SEC in any subsequent review by this federal agency. In fact, any review by the SEC is de novo and the agency may consider evidence not previously considered by FINRA or the NAC. Cf. Peacock, 794 F.3d at 43 (holding that Xerox is a state actor when performing as an agent of, and thus acting on behalf, of the District of Columbia to determine individuals’ eligibility for prescription drug coverage under Medicaid). In essence, FINRA is an independent body that assists the SEC by funneling referrals to the federal enforcement agency, using rules and procedures approved by the SEC as sufficient to make the assistance helpful. See Graman v. NASD, No. 97-cv-1556 (JR), 1998 WL 294022, at *2 (D.D.C. Apr. 27, 1998) (employing the same reasoning to hold that FINRA is not a state actor). Such FINRA functions do not amount to the organization’s entwinement with the SEC.

Second, plaintiff concedes that no court has yet to hold that FINRA is a state actor. See Hr’g Tr. 24:15–23 (The Court: “I haven’t found any case that’s held that FINRA is a state actor or any case that’s found either the New York Stock Exchange, which is another SRO, or NASD, the predecessor to FINRA, was a state actor. Are there any such cases?” Plaintiff’s Counsel: “There is not, to my knowledge, such a case.”). Rather, a multitude of courts nationwide have held the contrary—that FINRA is a private entity wholly separate from the SEC or any other government agency.⁷

The D.C. Circuit is notably not among those courts to have opined on this question. Consequently, both parties attempt to read between the lines of existing Circuit precedent discussing FINRA and its predecessor NASD as controlling, if not persuasive, authority in considering this question. Compare Gov’t’s TRO Opp’n at 1 (citing Saad v. SEC, 980 F.3d 103, 104 (D.C. Cir. 2020) (referring to FINRA as “a private self-regulatory organization”)) and id. at 16 (citing Free Enter. Fund v. Pub. Co. Acct. Oversight Bd., 561 U.S. 477, 484–86 (2010)

⁷ See, e.g., Desiderio v. NASD, 191 F.3d 198, 206–07 (2d Cir. 1999) (“The NASD is a private actor, not a state actor.”); D.L. Cromwell Invs., Inc. v. NASD Regul., Inc., 279 F.3d 155, 162 (2d Cir. 2002) (holding the same); First Jersey Sec., Inc. v. Bergen, 605 F.2d 690, 698 (3d Cir. 1979) (“Congress preferred self-regulation by a private body over direct involvement of a governmental agency”); Jones v. SEC, 115 F.3d 1173, 1183 (4th Cir. 1997) (“NASD is a private party and not a governmental agent”); Epstein v. SEC, 416 F. App’x 142, 148 (3d Cir. 2010) (“Epstein cannot bring a constitutional due process claim against the NASD, because ‘[t]he NASD is a private actor, not a state actor.’” (citation omitted)); see also Graman, 1998 WL 294022, at *3 (“Every court that has considered the question has concluded that NASD is not a governmental actor.”); Marchiano v. NASD, 134 F. Supp. 2d 90, 95 (D.D.C. 2001) (“The court is aware of no case—and Marchiano has presented none—in which NASD Defendants were found to be state actors either because of their regulatory responsibilities or because of any alleged collusion with criminal prosecutors. In fact, every court that has addressed those issues has rejected Marchiano’s arguments.”).

(contrasting defendant, a state actor, with “private self-regulatory organizations” in the securities space, such as FINRA)), and FINRA’s TRO Opp’n at 8 (citing Free Enterprise, 561 U.S. at 484–86), with Pl.’s TRO Mot. at 9 (citing NASD v. SEC, 431 F.3d 803, 804–05, 807 (D.C. Cir. 2005) (referring to NASD as a “quasi-governmental agency” with “quasi-governmental authority to adjudicate actions against members” and “quasi-governmental power to discipline its members”)). That exercise, while not fruitless, is also neither particularly helpful nor binding—the D.C. Circuit has not provided clear direction and has most recently passed on the opportunity to do so. See Springsteen-Abbott v. SEC, 989 F.3d 4, 7 (D.C. Cir. 2021) (referring only to the “premise that FINRA is a state actor” as “contested”).

Third, policy considerations militate strongly against accepting Alpine’s invitation to make the first judicial determination that FINRA is a state actor. If FINRA were deemed a state actor, the ramifications would be significant and far-reaching—or in FINRA’s words, would cause a “seismic shift in state action jurisprudence.” Hr’g Tr. at 73:23–74:9.⁸ Not only would Alpine be free to continue conduct FINRA previously found harmful to Alpine’s customers absent an immediate enforcement action, see FINRA’s Supp. Br. at 2–3, a finding that FINRA is a state actor would undermine Congress’s express intent to establish a private, self-regulatory system in the securities industry, see id. at 3–4; Gov’t’s Supp. Br. at 3. Relatedly, FINRA would be exposed to constitutional and administrative challenges from which Congress specifically sought to insulate FINRA, see FINRA’s Supp. Br. at 5; Gov’t’s Supp. Br. at 2, as recognized by the Supreme Court, see Free Enterprise, 561 U.S. at 484–86 (finding the Public Company Accounting Oversight Board (“PCAOB”) to be a state actor and distinguishing this body from SROs in the securities industry, citing that the PCOAB is created by statute, its leadership is government-appointed, and it has “expansive powers to govern an entire industry”). Finally, such a finding could significantly impact the SEC’s oversight role of FINRA, which is far more active in regulating aspects of the securities industry that the SEC currently does not touch, resulting in a potentially dramatic increase to the SEC’s workload. See FINRA’s Supp. Br. at 6; Gov’t’s Supp. Br. at 4. Although plaintiff attempts to paint the relief it now requests as narrow, see Pl.’s Supp. Br. at 1–2, the operative complaint states otherwise and asks for a significant remedy that would declare “that FINRA is a state actor obligated to respect the rights guaranteed under the United States Constitution,” SAC, Prayer for Relief ¶ 1, and “that FINRA is presently constituted and operating in a manner that violates the Constitution,” id. ¶ 2.

In vigorously urging that FINRA be deemed a state actor, plaintiffs make one thing crystal clear: plaintiffs are disgruntled members of FINRA. See, e.g., SAC ¶¶ 64–73 (criticizing the selection and operation of FINRA’s board), 74–83 (disparaging FINRA’s independence and supposed lack of industry representation on the board), 87 (accusing FINRA of taking retaliatory action against members of the microcap market such as plaintiffs), 100–110 (lodging complaints about FINRA’s fee structure, budget, and board-approved executive salaries), 129 (asserting that the Enforcement Proceeding is FINRA’s attempt “to obtain the corporate death penalty” against Alpine). Unfortunately for plaintiffs, however, their present challenge is not an effective way to file—let alone remedy—their grievances against FINRA. For instance, the relief they request would not cure all the deficiencies enumerated in their complaint. Declaring FINRA to be a state actor would not necessarily result in restructuring FINRA’s board, its executive compensation structure, or its allegedly retaliatory motives against the microcap industry. SCA attempted to assert some of these claims against FINRA in 2019, but the district court dismissed the suit for lack of subject matter jurisdiction, and the D.C. Circuit affirmed that judgment after finding that SCA’s breach of contract claim required administrative exhaustion prior to judicial review. See Scottsdale Cap. Advisors Corp. v. FINRA, 811 F. App’x 667, 668–69 (D.C. Cir. 2020) (Mem.). Plaintiffs may not now try to repackage those grievances as constitutional claims to obtain judicial review under the Supreme Court’s recent Axon decision.

Since FINRA is unlikely to be a state actor, plaintiff’s separation of powers, Appointment Clause, Fifth Amendment, and Seventh Amendment claims are also likely foreclosed.

2. FINRA Does Not Violate the Private Nondelegation Doctrine

Pleaded in the alternative, plaintiffs next argue that the Exchange Act “improperly and unconstitutionally delegates legislative power to an entity outside the Legislative Branch.” SAC ¶ 160. Alpine’s motion for injunctive relief then focuses on FINRA’s alleged violation of the private nondelegation doctrine, arguing that “Congress and the SEC have managed to delegate and outsource enforcement of federal securities law to a private entity that can ignore fundamental constitutional rights.” Pl.’s TRO Mot. at 20. Defendants counter that no such violation is present because “FINRA functions subordinately” to the SEC, which maintains “authority and surveillance over FINRA’s activities.” Gov’t’s Opp’n at 8 (citation omitted); accord FINRA’s TRO Opp’n at 11–13. Defendants are again likely correct.

“Federal agencies may not subdelegate their ‘decision-making authority . . . to outside entities—private or sovereign—absent affirmative evidence of authority to do so.”” Louisiana

Pub. Serv. Comm'n v. FERC, 860 F.3d 691, 696 (D.C. Cir. 2017) (quoting U.S. Telecom Ass'n v. FCC, 359 F.3d 554, 566 (D.C. Cir. 2004)). Aside from explicit statutory authority, an agency delegation to a private entity is valid if the agency exercises “authority and surveillance” over the private actor and “law-making remain[s] in the hands of the agency and [is] ‘not entrusted to the industry.’” Ass'n of Am. R.R. v. U.S. Dep't of Transp., 896 F.3d 539, 546 (D.C. Cir. 2018) (quoting Sunshine Anthracite Coal Co. v. Adkins, 310 U.S. 381, 399 (1940)).

Congress intended that SROs, like FINRA, would fulfill a supervisory role over the securities industry. See 15 U.S.C. § 78o-3(b) (listing requirements of a broker-dealer association for the SEC to characterize the organization as a national securities association). Yet SROs’ authority is subordinate to the SEC’s ultimate control and oversight. The SEC may suspend or revoke FINRA’s registration if “necessary or appropriate in the public interest, for the protection of investors, or otherwise in furtherance of the purposes of [the Exchange Act].” 15 U.S.C. § 78s(h)(1). While FINRA promulgates its own rules and standards for professional conduct, those rules are reviewed and approved by the SEC with very limited exceptions. See Turbeville, 874 F.3d at 1270 (describing the SEC’s oversight duties); 15 U.S.C. § 78s(b)–(c). The SEC at any time may “abrogate, add to, and delete from” any FINRA rule. Id. § 78s(c).

Although FINRA may take the first step in investigating and disciplining an entity for violation of its rules, an SEC regulation, or a statutory provision, id. § 78o-3(b)(7), any adjudication by FINRA is subject to de novo and sua sponte review by the SEC, id. § 78s(d)(2); Commission Rule of Practice 452, 17 C.F.R. § 201.452. Such structure has resulted in a finding that federal securities laws do not amount to an unconstitutional delegation by every court to consider the issue. See, e.g., Oklahoma v. United States, 62 F.4th 221, 229 (6th Cir. 2023); Sorrell v. SEC, 679 F.2d 1323, 1325–26 (9th Cir. 1982); First Jersey Secs., Inc. v. Bergen, 605

F.2d 690, 697 (3d Cir. 1979); Todd & Co. v. SEC, 557 F.2d 1008, 1012–13 (3d Cir. 1977); R.H. Johnson v. SEC, 198 F.2d 690, 695 (2d Cir. 1952). This Court sees no reason to depart from those findings and as such holds that plaintiffs’ private nondelegation doctrine claim is unlikely to succeed on the merits.⁹

3. Plaintiffs’ First Amendment Claim Lacks Merit

Finally, plaintiffs challenge broker-dealers’ “forced” association with FINRA “in order to engage in their chosen profession.” SAC ¶ 164. Defendants argue that the Exchange Act’s requirement that registered broker-dealers join FINRA “does not alone implicate any First Amendment right” and that, because “[p]laintiffs do not assert any ‘expressive purpose[]’ for which they wish to avoid association with FINRA,” plaintiffs’ First Amendment claim must fail. Gov’t’s Opp’n at 19; accord FINRA’s TRO Opp’n at 13–14. Again, defendants’ arguments have a substantial likelihood of prevailing.

Certainly, the First Amendment’s protection of freedom of speech also extends to protect “[t]he right to eschew association for expressive purposes.” Janus v. Am. Fed’n of State, Cnty., and Mun. Emps., Council 31, 138 S. Ct. 2448, 2463 (2018); see Roberts v. U.S. Jaycees, 468 U.S. 609, 623 (1984) (“Freedom of association . . . plainly presupposes a freedom not to associate.”). Freedom of expressive association, however, is not absolute. Boy Scouts of Am. v. Dale, 530 U.S. 640, 648 (2000). Rather, the Supreme Court has held that a regulation may override that right when it “serve[s] compelling state interests, unrelated to the suppression of ideas, that cannot be achieved through means significantly less restrictive of associational freedoms.” Id. (quoting Roberts, 468 U.S. at 623).¹⁰

FINRA articulates a significantly compelling interest embodied in the Exchange Act to justify mandatory FINRA membership. In permitting securities industry regulation through SROs, Congress intended those entities to “prevent fraudulent and manipulative acts and practices, [] promote just and equitable principles of trade, [] foster cooperation and coordination” among all industry players, “remove impediments to and perfect the mechanism of a free and open market and a national market system, and, in general, to protect investors and the public interest.” 15 U.S.C. § 78o-3(b)(6).

Mandatory FINRA membership functions accordingly to ensure that broker-dealers transacting in the securities space all adhere to the same set of professional and industry standards to protect both actual and prospective securities purchasers. See Gov’t’s Supp. Br. at 6 (citing Roth v. SEC, 22 F.3d 1108, 1109 (D.C. Cir. 1994)). For instance, FINRA sets “recordkeeping and reporting obligations, fiduciary duties, and special antifraud rules[,]” Gov’t’s Supp. Br. at 7 (quoting In re Registration Requirements for Foreign Broker-Dealers, Exchange Act Release No. 34-27017, 1989 WL 1097092, at *3–4 (July 11, 1989)), as well as conducts professional training to assure industry participants that those transacting in the space are “financially capable” of doing so in accordance with regulatory standards and in pursuit of fair and transparent treatment of customers. Gov’t’s Supp. Br. at 7 (citing SEC, Persons Deemed

Not to Be Brokers, Exchange Act Release No. 22172, 1985 WL 634795, at *2 (June 27, 1985)).

By joining FINRA, members agree to bind themselves to standards and be held accountable if their conduct falls short—all to the benefit of free-flowing and functioning financial markets and fair treatment towards customers. Since the compelling interest in statutorily mandated FINRA membership so outweighs any expressive association right, plaintiffs again are unlikely to succeed on their First Amendment claim.¹¹

In sum, none of plaintiffs’ claims in their operative complaint are likely to succeed on the merits, resulting in this factor weighing against a preliminary injunction or a TRO.

B. Irreparable Harm

On the second factor, Alpine argues that resolution of the pending Enforcement Proceeding may include “the corporate death penalty” of expulsion from the industry, Pl.’s TRO Mot. at 1; accord SAC ¶¶ 10, 129, and, further, that “subjection to an illegitimate proceeding, led by an illegitimate decision maker constitutes ‘a here-and-now injury’” supporting a finding of irreparable harm, Pl.’s TRO Mot. at 22 (citing Axon, 143 S. Ct. at 903). FINRA counters that any harm imposed on Alpine from the Enforcement Proceeding is “overstated” because the outcome of the proceeding would not occur for many days, possibly months, and that such a decision could then be appealed to the SEC and stayed. See FINRA’s TRO Opp’n at 15 (citing applicable FINRA rules on appeals of FINRA decisions). Here, the Supreme Court’s Axon decision tips this factor in Alpine’s favor.

At the outset, Alpine bluntly states that FINRA’s Enforcement Proceeding subjects it to potential expulsion from the industry, an existential threat to its business that would force the company to cease operations, and so the proceeding must be delayed. See Pl.’s TRO Mot. at 22–23. Yet, Alpine faces precisely the same expulsion penalty under the March 2022 Panel Decision currently on review by the NAC. See generally March 2022 Panel Decision. Enjoining the NAC review process, however, is not the focus of the injunctive relief Alpine now seeks, despite the fact that expulsion may be inevitable if the March 2022 Panel Decision is upheld. That consequence does not arise from any lack of due process afforded to Alpine at the original enforcement proceeding leading to the March 2022 Panel Decision now on appeal to the NAC, nor from the ongoing Enforcement Proceeding, nor even from plaintiffs’ asserted constitutional claims. Rather, that consequence appears to be the result of Alpine’s failure to comply with FINRA’s permanent cease-and-desist order issued as part of the March 2022 Panel Decision. In the face of that decision, which took immediate effect on March 22, 2022, Alpine is suspected of flouting FINRA’s directive to cease harmful conduct by failing to comply with FINRA’s permanent cease-and-desist order. See FINRA’s TRO Opp’n, Ex. B, Pet. for a Hearing & the Imposition of Sanctions – Preliminary Statement (“Pet. for Enforcement Proceeding”) ¶¶ 1–2, ECF No. 70-2 (“FINRA’s Department of Enforcement requests a hearing . . . and the imposition of sanctions against Respondent Alpine . . . for violating a March 22, 2022 Permanent Cease and Desist Order Alpine disregarded the terms of the [Order], which was intended to prevent the firm from harming customers through ongoing acts of misconduct.”). In allegedly defying the permanent cease-and-desist order—by FINRA’s count, more than 35,000 times—FINRA decided that, due to Alpine’s chronic recidivism, this SRO had little choice but to take expedited steps to expel the company from the industry even while Alpine’s appeal of the March 2022

Panel Decision is pending, a decision, as noted, that also recommended expulsion. See Pet. for Enforcement Proceeding ¶¶ 5–6.

In context, Alpine now seeks to employ extraordinary equitable relief to halt FINRA’s continuing enforcement of its own orders, under the cloak of several asserted constitutional claims so that this Court can save Alpine from harm allegedly due to its own defiance of those orders. Granting the requested TRO and consequently delaying the Enforcement Proceeding would thus sanction Alpine’s alleged noncompliant conduct with FINRA’s permanent cease-and-desist order. Such a ruling would encourage violators to race to district court with constitutional claims to delay or halt enforcement proceedings, providing a direct mechanism to subvert FINRA’s enforcement of its own orders designed to protect the securities industry. Nonetheless, the irreparable harm factor focuses on the harm to the plaintiff seeking the relief, though the source of that harm is noteworthy in weighing these equitable factors.

On that point, Alpine invokes Axon to argue that its assertion of constitutional claims against FINRA and its adjudicatory process subjects the company to a “here-and-now injury” and automatically triggers a finding of irreparable harm. See Pl.’s TRO Mot. at 22–23 (quoting Axon, 143 S. Ct. at 903). Indeed, the Supreme Court expressed the view that being subjected to an adjudicatory process that a plaintiff claims is constitutionally flawed is “impossible to remedy once the proceeding is over” and a “grievance [for which] the court of appeals can do nothing: [a] proceeding that has already happened cannot be undone.” Axon, 143 S. Ct. at 903–04. Alpine is right that this strong language in Axon must be viewed as a consideration relevant to irreparable harm, see Hr’g Tr. at 63:7–13 (Alpine agreeing that the “here-and-now injury” language in Axon is the Supreme Court “putting its thumb on the scale among the preliminary injunctive factors for irreparable harm”), and neither FINRA nor the government, as intervenor-defendant, present much argument against this view, see, e.g., Hr’g Tr. at 78:13–80:11 (FINRA arguing only that Axon does not alter the preliminary injunction analysis); id. at 89:4–90:6 (referencing the government’s choice not to take a position on certain preliminary injunction factors before stating that nothing in Axon displaces the preliminary injunction factors). Consequently, under the Supreme Court’s explicit language, the nature of the constitutional claims asserted here, no matter their unlikelihood of success, suffice to show irreparable harm to Alpine, even though any such harm may stem directly from Alpine’s noncompliant actions.¹²

C. Balance of Equities and the Public Interest

Finally, the parties contest where other interests lie. Alpine argues that, FINRA “waited years to assert [its] claims [against Alpine] and would suffer no prejudice” from a delay in the Enforcement Proceeding and that the public has an interest in “assuring that Alpine is not subject to unconstitutional treatment at the hands of FINRA.” Pl.’s TRO Mot. at 23 (footnote omitted).

¹² Although not argued by the parties, Axon’s extraordinary language in addressing the “problem . . . stemming from the interaction between the alleged injury and the timing of review,” id. at 903, raises the question of whether the Supreme Court’s comparison of a challenge to the constitutionality of an adjudicative body to the collateral order doctrine, is intended to ensure that constitutional claims must be given threshold consideration in district court, see Axon, 143 S. Ct. at 904–06, warranting an automatic stay of the challenged adjudication until resolution of the constitutional issues. Under that reading of Axon, which invokes the collateral order doctrine to propose that a constitutional challenge must be decided first similarly to consideration of “immunity doctrines,” id. at 904–05, whether any of the preliminary-injunctive factors are met would become beside the point. On this point, Axon applies that reasoning to the facts before the Supreme Court, adding that “certain rights ‘not to stand trial’ or face other legal processes . . . are ‘effectively lost’ if review is deferred until after trial. . . . So too here.” Id. at 904 (internal citations omitted). The Supreme Court’s recent vacatur of a D.C. Circuit decision, which required a constitutional challenge to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (“FERC”) to be exhausted before the agency, pursuant to the applicable statutory review scheme, signals that intention to broaden the collateral order doctrine. See Bohon v. FERC, No. 22-566, 2023 WL 3046112 (Apr. 24, 2023) (Mem.), vacating, 37 F.4th 663 (D.C. Cir. 2022). The specter, then, of dual-tracked proceedings—one before federal district court and another before a federal agency or adjudicatory body—raises the further question of what procedural mechanism is proper for managing the interaction between those proceedings. One option is expedited briefing of dispositive motions before the federal district court to resolve the merits of the constitutional challenge quickly, only halting the adjudicatory body’s proceeding on a short-term basis. See, e.g., Sidak v. U.S. Int’l Trade Comm’n, No. 23-cv-325 (TNM), 2023 WL 3275635, at *4 n.3, *5–7, *13 (D.D.C. May 5, 2023) (in resolving the expedited motion for summary judgment, in this “unusual” case, carefully applying Axon to hold that plaintiff’s Appointments Clause challenge to International Trade Commission Administrative Law Judges was ripe for review because, among other things, plaintiff was not a party to the underlying agency enforcement action and “had no obligation (nor opportunity) to earlier raise this claim in federal court”). All that said, because Alpine has not invoked Axon beyond the considerations of irreparable harm relevant to its pending motion for equitable relief, this case is no occasion to opine on these lingering questions.

Conversely, FINRA argues that “[a] preliminary injunction would impair FINRA’s pursuit of its regulatory mandate and undermine the public interest by barring FINRA” from enforcing its orders, including those against Alpine. FINRA’s TRO Opp’n at 16. FINRA is correct.

FINRA has an interest in protecting the public from the harms caused by broker-dealers engaging in securities violations. This is the very mission of this SRO. That overwhelming interest is especially important in FINRA’s case of conducting expedited enforcement actions to halt the imminent risk to the public presented by bad actors potentially resulting in millions of dollars lost from customers, like those that initiated FINRA’s investigation against Alpine in 2019. See March 2022 Panel Decision at 2 (“Enforcement’s investigation of Alpine Securities began when some of Alpine Securities’ customers complained to FINRA about, among other things, the firm’s $5,000 monthly account fee.”). The risk of harm to the public from an alleged bad actor openly and repeatedly flouting a remedial cease-and-desist order issued by a FINRA panel, allegedly thousands of times, at the expense of customers, is significant and concrete compared to Alpine’s interest in asserting constitutional claims against FINRA that have an unlikelihood of success for the reasons already summarized. As such, the balance of equities and public interest disfavor any injunctive relief.

In considering the four factors in total, while irreparable harm tips in Alpine’s favor, the other factors strongly weigh against granting plaintiff’s request for equitable relief and so such relief is inappropriate here.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, plaintiffs’ Motion for Reconsideration of Minute Order Denying Emergency Preliminary Injunction Motion is granted and plaintiffs’ Renewed

Emergency Motion for Preliminary Injunction and Temporary Restraining Order is denied. An Order consistent with this Memorandum Opinion will be entered contemporaneously.
