

ANNEX 8
TO
EXHIBIT A

A photographic survey of the French shipwreck L'Orient, blown up in Aboukir, Bay, Egypt, in 1798, with coherent, inter-connected wooden hull remains intact.

DR. SEAN A. KINGSLEY

THE SHIPWRECK OF NAPOLEON'S L'ORIENT

Images from:

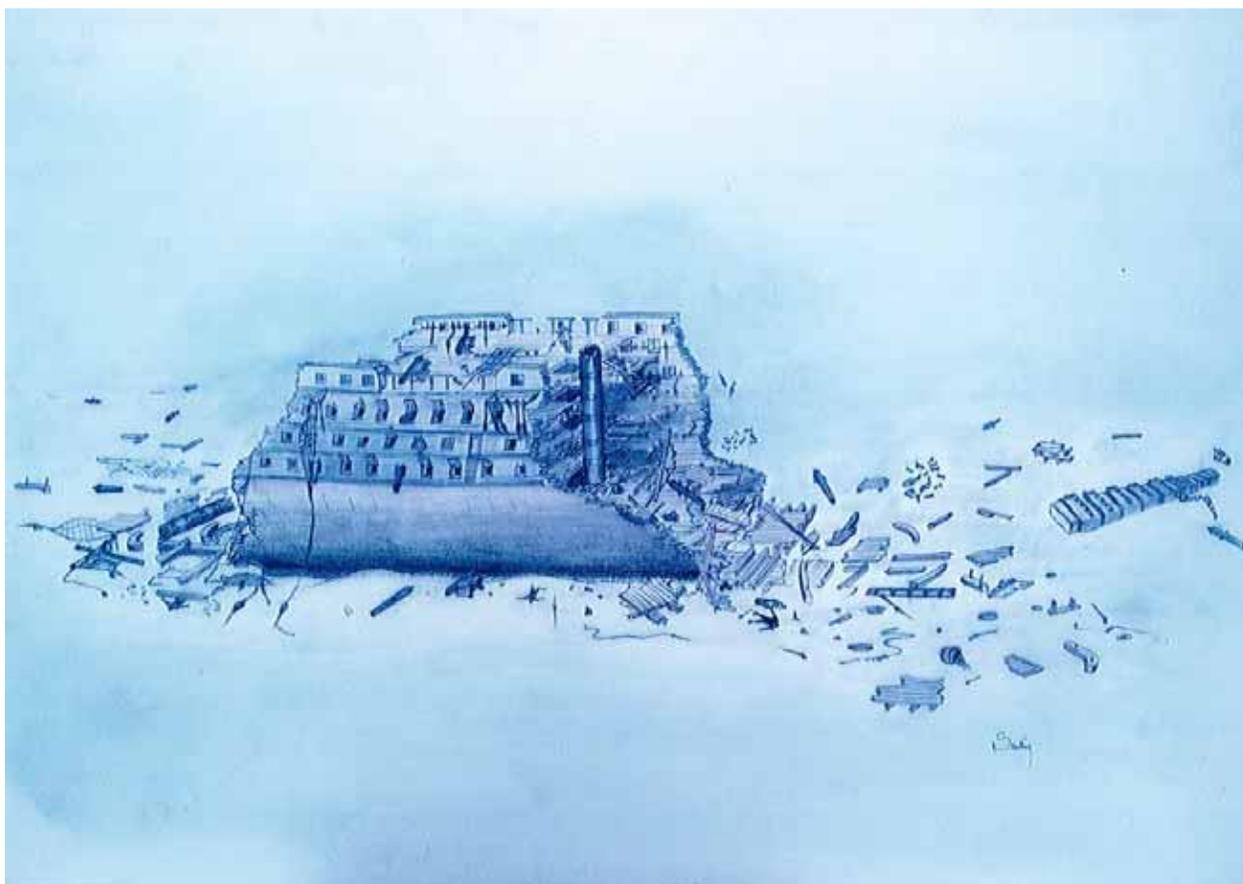

<http://www.underwaterdiscovery.org/Sitemap/Project/ProjectArticel.aspx?ProjectName=Napoleon&Layout=B&XmlDocument=0003.xml>

<http://www.underwaterdiscovery.org/Sitemap/Project/ProjectArticel.aspx?ProjectName=Napoleon&Layout=B&XmlDocument=0012.xml>

<http://www.underwaterdiscovery.org/Sitemap/Project/Napoleon/Gallery.aspx?GalleryGroupKey=Napoleon1&SelectedImage=Naps-lost-fleet-200.jpg>

French warship: 118 guns; 65.2 meters long,

Blown up during the Battle of the Nile France in Aboukir Bay, Egypt, on 1 August 1798.

Reconstruction of the hull remains of the Orient that survived her explosion and formed into a wreck.

Annex 8

Copyright 2007 Odyssey Marine Exploration – May not be reprinted without written permission of Odyssey Marine Exploration

One of the bilge pumps of the Orient amongst well-preserved wooden hull remains.

A broken cannon on the Orient shipwreck site twisted out of shape by the ship's explosion.

A wooden rigging block on the Orient shipwreck.

The excellently preserved, copper sheathed rudder of the Orient and a large copper spike from its attachment system.

Gold coins from the shipwreck of the Orient.