Re: Motorola Mobility, Inc. v. Apple Inc., 10-cv-3580

Dear Jill:

I write in connection with Apple, Inc.'s ("Apple") November 10, 2011 service of subpoenas on third parties AT&T, Inc., Comcast Corp., Mediacom Communications Corp., Time Warner Cable, Inc., Bright House Networks, LLC, Charter Communications, Inc., Cox Communications, Inc., and Suddenlink Communications ("the Third-Party Subpoenas").

Apple's Third-Party Subpoenas are overbroad and unnecessarily burden non-parties, and clients of Motorola, with significant amounts of discovery, including information and documents that can be requested of Motorola. In an effort to streamline discovery in this matter, Motorola proposes that the parties discuss at our meet and confer scheduled for November 15 how these various requests are relevant and which discovery requests may be addressed by Motorola rather than the subpoenaed third-parties.

Motorola also notes that the Third-Party Subpoenas seek depositions in multiple locations on both December 5 and December 12. We presume these are merely placeholder dates and that Apple does not intend to proceed on these dates. Please let us know promptly if that is incorrect.
