Robin,

We agree to Motorola's proposed date for filing proposed joint claim constructions. Thus, the parties are in agreement on all dates except for the date for exchanging terms for construction. In this regard, we don't understand your rationale for moving that deadline 1 month earlier than your original proposal and on a date prior to the exchange of rebuttal contentions. We believe that our proposed deadline of February 4 is more appropriate. Please reconsider Apple's proposed deadline and let us know by 6 PM pacific today whether Motorola will agree to February 4.

Best regards,
 Robert

Marshall,

Thank you for providing Motorola's proposal. We agree with the January 24 date for exchanging non-infringement, validity, and secondary consideration contentions. With respect to claim construction, Motorola's proposed February 12 deadline does not appear to include the exchange of the proposed constructions themselves. Apple proposes that the exchange of constructions should follow the exchange of terms by approximately one week. We also propose that the briefing schedule be adjusted to provide approximately the same amount of time for the opening and responsive briefs. A revised proposal is below with our changes indicated in red. Also, this proposal applies only to the newly asserted patents; the original patents will not be subject to claim construction again. Please confirm your agreement.

Robert,

Per our conversation on Monday's meet and confer conference call, Motorola has prepared a proposed schedule of dates for Markman briefing and exchanging additional contentions. These proposals are shown on the chart below (marked in blue).

Please let us know if Apple is agreeable to these proposed dates or provide an alternative proposal that we may consider.

Best regards, Marshall
