You're an idiot for making this thread the way you phrased everything. Read the damn TOS first. Find a file host (large and facing lawsuits at the moment) that would not do this with all the pressure they are facing. Do you think they would risk closing to satisfy your needs? Open a new account and refrain for clicking New Thread.

If you're going to reupload the files over and over again, upload it to a different hotfile account.

I dont think they will. Those files will get them new customers so its in their advantage. They will only be removed when a DMCA complaint is sent to them

For those of you who don't know, this is probably because of the recent MPAA action taken against hotfile.

The MPAA wants to sue HF and possibly take it down for infringing upon copyright and not paying any of its massive profits to the industry for the content it is sharing.

So its likely the HF owner (yea one guy owns it afaik, hence the unprofessional emails he writes in response to support questions) will start removing all your accounts to reduce how much he eventually has to pay out to the MPAA and whoever.

You get the idea.
