Dear Karen:

I am very surprised to receive your fax below - if the identified document was inadvertently produced, why did you not identify it as such in the letter you sent yesterday that listed numerous documents that were supposedly inadvertently produced. Your client has not produced very many documents. I would think that after you apparently concluded earlier this week that there was an inadvertent production of one document, that when you reviewed the small balance of produced documents yesterday, you would have noticed this document among the few documents you produced. Why did you not contend yesterday that it was inadvertently produced?

This claim of inadvertent production is disturbing because, as you know from electronic filing, we filed a brief attaching this document approximately one half hour before your letter was received. Clearly our filing triggered your claim that this document was somehow inadvertently produced. Equally disturbing is the fact that your letter purports to bear a fax time of 9:56, but in fact was received at 10:57 - the legend on your fax machine is clearly an hour off - perhaps you did not reset it when we went on daylight savings time?

In all events, the content of this document is plainly not privileged. As the matter is now submitted to the Court, I suggest we let Judge Pallmeyer resolve the privilege claim, if you persist in making it. We are available to meet and confer if you would like to do so. Thanks for your response.

Ps. I will write you separately about your letter of yesterday on inadvertent production.
