I initially found the article searching For my name "Ari Balabanian" and Found it easier by adding westlaw next to it. So using the google search engine I would type ari Balabanian westlaw

Mr. Balabanian,

The full-text article was removed from Westlaw last Friday. However, clicking on the link you provided, does pull up the blurb. Clicking on the title to the blurb indicates the full-text document has been removed.

Could you provide me with the search that you ran that initially pulled up the document you have provided the link to. Was this some type of alert you had set up in Westlaw? Did you run a specific search in Westlaw? Whatever steps you originally took that pulled up this page you are referencing in the link, would be very helpful to us. The only way we can seem to find this blurb is by clicking the link you provided. Any additional details would be great.

Thank you. I apologize. We thought the document had been totally removed.

Fraud (online): FTC SHUTS DOWN CROSS-BORDER DOMAIN-NAME SCAM

The Federal Trade Commission has permanently closed down a Toronto, Canada- based group of con artists that bilked Internet domain name holders of more than $4 million through bogus renewal invoices. The FTC announced a settlement that shut down Internet Listing Service Corp. and five other corporate entities. The investigation also resulted in judgments against defendants Ari Balabanian, Isaac Benlolo and Kirk Mulveney. According to a stipulated final judgment in the case, the defendants would ...
