

LAWSUITS

Share Like

Man Acquitted Of Sexual Assault Sues Blog For Calling Him Serial Rapist

 Irin Carmon—A Chicago man who was acquitted on a sexual assault charge is suing the legal blog Above The Law for implying that he's a serial rapist. If Meanith Huon gets his way, blogger sloppiness may cost ATL $50 million.

Huon, a lawyer, was initially charged with two counts of sexual assault, two counts of sexual abuse, and one count of unlawful restraint. A woman had jumped out of his car, ran through a cornfield barefoot, and knocked on a random person's door saying he had forced her into sexual activity. She later said she believed she was spending time with him for a job opportunity related to alcohol promotions, until he allegedly yelled at her to perform oral sex. Huon's version was that it was a consensual encounter, and partly on the strength of a bartender's testimony that the woman had been drinking and asked where to go to have fun, the jury believed him.

Huon is also suing local law enforcement authorities in Madison County, Illinois for prosecutorial misconduct. His beef with Above The Law stems from a roundup post entitled "Rape Potpurri," in which blogger Elie Mystal mistakenly believes that news accounts of the same incident are different incidents that should have tipped the woman off that Huon was a serial offender. "The content of the article were [sic] defamatory in that it incorrectly and recklessly portrayed Mr. Huon as a serial rapist by treating the same complaining witness as three different women," says the complaint, according to Forbes.

"And this, people, is why God invented Google," wrote Mystal in the original post, linking to articles that in fact described the same case. The lesson learned: Google only takes you so far.

Lawyer Sues Legal Blog For \$50 M Over Rape Story [Forbes]

Related: Rape Potpurri [ATL]

RAPE SEX SPORTS
Rape Potpurri
ELIE MYSTAL

We've got a couple of rape stories, but I don't have enough rape humor to fit out two posts. So we'll tack them together.

AdChoices

...that can earn you $100 cash back*

*when you spend $500 in your first 60 days of Cardmembership

- 1 Sunday Night Shenanigans
- 2 Mel Gibson's Gay Brother Comes To His Defense
- 3 Badass Wichita Abortion Doctor Responds to Death Threats with Lightning Bolt Car
- 4 The KissCam, Demystified
- 5 Younger Generation Totally Over Sex, Proclaims Someone in Older Generation
- 6 Octomom And Brood Wreak Absolute Havoc On Live Television
- 7 Science Explains Why You're Undaunted By Killer Hangovers
- 8 Giada Arrives From a Space Business Meeting Just in Time to Overpronounce Italian Words at Polo Match
- 9 Bachmann Signs Anti-Porn Pledge Saying Blacks Were Better Off During Slavery
- 10 Are Women Underreporting Rapes As A Result Of The Dominique Strauss-Kahn Case?
- 11 By The Grace of Jersey God, Vinny's Back on Jersey Shore
- 12 Sarah Palin Declares She Can Win on Newsweek Cover
- 13 Adorable Kitten Plays Invisible Piano
- 14 Model Hair-In-Face Epidemic Gives Everyone's Mom an Aneurysm
- 15 Fire Up The Royal Wind Machine
- 16 Australian Muslim Women Who Don't Show Face to Police Face Jail Time
- 17 The Many Shades of Soccer Celebration
- 18 Can Kate Middleton Bring Back Pantyhose?
- 19 The Arrested Development Movie Is Happening, People
- 20 TOMS Distances Itself From Focus On The Family
- 21 Taiwan's funeral strippers dance for a dead crowd
- 22 Should Schools Tell Children They're Overweight?

DISCUSSION THREADS Featured All Start a new thread

SarahMC

11 May 2011 9:16 PM

Just because a man is acquitted of rape does not mean he did not commit rape. That a jury would decide "not guilty" does not magically erase what he did—if he did, in fact, rape someone. The vast majority of rapists are never convicted of rape. Does that make them not rapists?

Nick1693 @SarahMC

@SarahMC: No, but our legal system makes it so that someone is innocent until proven guilty.

As he wasn't proven guilty, he's not considered a rapist.

If he is a rapist, the facts will show that. If not, he's innocent.

 BringerofthePain @SarahMC

No, but it does mean that you can't call them rapists without being sued. It's merely the difference between what they are and what they can be identified as in public. You can think he's a rapist to your hearts content, but you can't print it.

 taylvie3 @SarahMC

No, but someone found not guilty is innocent in the eyes of the law. Calling them differently on a blog opens you up to a libel suit. Truth would be a defense in a libel suit, but that would mean retrying a criminal case in a civil libel lawsuit to prevent paying $50M.

 SarahMC @BringerofthePain

I understand that, but many people here are saying if a jury doesn't find a person guilty of something, it means they didn't do it, which is not true. For instance, Nick1693 above you just said if he's a rapist the facts will show it--which again, is not true. The facts might very well show it, but because the woman went out to get drunk, those facts are dismissed. I am not confused about what can and cannot be printed. I am confused by the view that if the courts don't convict someone, s/he must not have done it.

 Dinosaurs and Nachos, girlfriend! @Nick1693

Innocent until proven guilty is a widely misunderstood concept. It basically means that the mere fact that someone is charged with a crime is not itself evidence that the person committed a crime.

Then you go to court. In court, there will be evidence presented. This evidence is where an actual, legal determination is made. Nobody is declared "innocent" in a court of law, they are found guilty or not guilty.

"Not guilty" is absolutely not the same thing as "innocent" from a legal standpoint. Those words do not mean the same thing in the world of law. "Innocent until proven guilty" is merely a concept for laymen to try to keep their non-lawyer brains from jumping to (non-legal) conclusions.

Hide 5 replies

An Anti-Gay, Anti-Choice Group? \(Updated\)

24 10 Things You May Have Missed On TV This Week

25 The Very, Very Scientific Benefits Of Naked Yoga

26 The Best Videos of the Week