Nov 4, 2010 Patrick reelected governor

Governor Deval Patrick, who came into office four years ago with big-ticket promises such as putting 1,000 new police officers on the streets and providing property tax relief, began yesterday to sketch a more modest and austere agenda for the next four years. A day after his victory over Republican Charles D. Baker, Patrick was greeted by cheering staff members lined up in his State House office. After telling them he was eager to discuss "the history we made and the history we're going to..."

Oct 31, 2010 Campaigns go Halloween

Fred and Ben Simpson will not vote tomorrow, but when they showed up at Governor Deval Patrick's house last night dressed as Harry Potter and a robot, they still got the full charm treatment: a handshake, a smile, and most importantly, a handful of Skittles, Snickers, and Twix. "Good luck on Tuesday," 8-year-old Ben Simpson told the governor, after a little prompting from his mother. "Thank you," Patrick said. "All the best. Happy Halloween." It was the Halloween edition of the...

Oct 25, 2010 Candidates sharpen messages in final televised debate

In their final televised debate of a long, heated campaign, the four candidates for governor tonight sharpened their messages and political profiles for voters, presenting clear choices on taxes, spending, immigration, and even lessons learned from the Big Dig. The debate, which set the stage for a week-long sprint to Election Day next Tuesday, distilled the major themes that have defined the 2010 gubernatorial election. Although the candidates seemed testier after enduring each other's...

Governor Christie of New Jersey joins Baker in Melrose rally

MELROSE — With New Jersey Governor Christopher J. Christie offering a blueprint for GOP victory, Republican Charles D. Baker brought 800 chanting supporters to their feet yesterday as he promised to replicate Christie's victories in Massachusetts. In one of Baker's most energetic events to date, Christie regaled the crowd at Melrose City Memorial Hall with stories of his election win over an incumbent in a three-way race last year and the confrontations with the Legislature over taxes and...

Governor Patrick makes unannounced trip to Iraq

Governor Deval Patrick is in Iraq, traveling with four other governors, visiting Massachusetts men and women who are serving in the military there, his office said this afternoon. Patrick told NECN-TV in a live satellite interview that he landed in Kuwait in 125-degree temperatures and that his last two days visiting injured troops in Walter Reed and now with active troops in Iraq have given him a greater appreciation for their sacrifice. "I think they're all very professional. They're..."

Key antiabortion group endorses Cahill

Independent candidate for governor Timothy P. Cahill last week picked up the endorsement of a key Massachusetts antiabortion group despite his support for abortion rights, which he promoted on his campaign website just two months ago as one of his "core values." The Massachusetts Citizens for Life State Political Action Committee announced its endorsement of Cahill last Monday, saying he would be an "outstanding advocate for the unborn, the disabled, and the elderly." "Cahill holds..."

Baker: sympathy for Arizona in immigration debate

Republican gubernatorial candidate Charles D. Baker said yesterday that he could not blame Arizona for enacting a law cracking down on illegal immigrants that has sparked controversy nationwide. "Arizona is a border state, living with the failure of the federal government to do the job of securing their border," Baker said in an online chat on Boston.com. "I don't blame them for taking this issue on directly," he said. Baker also lamented that a measure in the Massachusetts Senate...

Diane Patrick: lesser role in husband's campaign

The women at Peoples Baptist Church of Boston listen intently after lunch, plates of petite pastries untouched, as Diane Patrick tells them of the feelings that crashed over her after her husband ascended to the governor's office — dismay at suggestions she would quit her job at a high-powered law firm, anxiety at the unrelenting public scrutiny, and, ultimately, the terrifying sensation that her identity was being sucked away as she tried to fill a new, uncomfortable role. The debilitating...

R.I. gaming firm refiles Cahill lottery contract suit

A Rhode Island gaming firm is headed back to court to pursue its contention that state Treasurer Timothy P. Cahill rigged lottery contracts in exchange for campaign funds, a move that could reignite a troublesome controversy for his flagging campaign for governor. Bingo Innovative Software refiled its suit in Suffolk Superior Court yesterday after talks last week with the attorney general's office aimed at settling the case fell apart. In its bid with the state Lottery Commission to televise...

Mississippi governor urges Patrick's ouster at Boston conference

Governor Deval Patrick welcomed governors from around the country to Boston yesterday for the kickoff of a National Governors Association conference. But one of them came with an unusual gift for the host: an attack ad urging Patrick's ouster. The Republican Governors Association, led by Governor Haley Barbour of Mississippi, released the anti-Patrick ad just two hours after Patrick officially opened the summit, a collegial confab that Barbour is attending along with 35 other...

Cahill launches TV ad campaign

State Treasurer Timothy P. Cahill launched his first sustained television advertising campaign of the gubernatorial race yesterday, trying to reverse his precipitous slide in the polls and a drop-off in fund-raising. The timing, on the eve of a holiday weekend when voters traditionally tune out of politics, is a calculated gamble reflecting his difficult situation. Cahill had been squirreling away $3 million in his campaign account in hope of blitzing the airwaves closer to the November...

Survey shows Patrick in the lead, Baker gaining fast

Governor Deval Patrick has improved his political standing in recent months but still faces major hurdles in his bid for reelection, according to a new Boston Globe poll, which shows Republican rival Charles D. Baker gaining ground and many voters dissatisfied with the direction of the state and the governor's handling of his job. Patrick won the support of 38 percent of likely voters in the survey, while Baker, who is still unknown to much of the electorate, received 31 percent. State...

First major 3-way gubernatorial debate

Governor Deval Patrick is battling a recession and a national backlash against incumbents, but it was his Republican rival, Charles D. Baker, who found himself on the defensive more often yesterday during the first major debate of the gubernatorial campaign. The wide-open format in the initial face-off, and the presence of independent candidate Timothy P. Cahill, helped Patrick deflect criticism on issues where he is most politically vulnerable: taxes, health care costs, immigration, and...

Baker launches TV ad campaign

With polls showing most voters still do not know who he is, Republican gubernatorial candidate Charles D. Baker plans to launch his first television advertisement today, introducing himself as a local guy in a gray T-shirt playing pickup basketball with his son. Baker is the first candidate in the race to launch a full television campaign, five months ahead of the November election. One outside group, the Republican Governors Association, has run blistering attacks on independent candidate...

WORCESTER — In a combative and forceful speech to the state Democratic convention, Governor Deval Patrick rallied party activists to his reelection campaign yesterday, warning that his rivals would roll back the gains his administration has made in the areas of the economy, social justice, health care, and the environment. Appearing before more than 3,900 delegates, Patrick gave a strong defense of his record and a robust appeal to the party's values, trying to infuse the crowd with both...
