OPINION AND ORDER

This matter comes before the Court on the Motion for Partial Judgment on the Pleadings [ECF No. 32] filed by Defendants Culver Construction, Inc., Culver Development Corporation, Wes Culver Realty, LLC, and New Paris Development Company, LLC, on October 31, 2016. In that Motion, the Defendants argue that the statute of limitations provision in the Copyright Act bars Plaintiff Design Basics LLC’s claims based on infringing acts that occurred prior to February 3, 2013 (the “Look-Back Date”). This matter is fully briefed and ripe for review.

BACKGROUND

The Plaintiff is a Nebraska company that creates, markets, publishes and licenses the use of architectural works and technical drawings. The Defendants are Elkhart County, Indiana companies that build homes. On February 3, 2016, the Plaintiff filed a Complaint [ECF No. 1] against the Defendants for “publish[ing], distribut[ing], market[ing], and advertis[ing] certain architectural designs for single family residential homes” that infringe the Plaintiff’s copyrighted works. (Compl. ¶¶ 9–27, ECF No. 1.) The Defendants have publicized and built homes based on floor plans named in the Plaintiff’s Complaint, spanning times both before and after the Look-Back Date. The Defendants filed Answers [ECF Nos. 22–25], on May 27, 2016. On October 31, 2016, the Defendants moved for Partial Judgment on the Pleadings. The Plaintiff filed its Response to the Defendants' Motion [ECF No. 37] on November 17, 2016, and the Defendants' Reply [ECF No. 40] was filed on November 28, 2016.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

A motion for judgment on the pleadings, pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(c), permits a party to move for judgment after the complaint and answer have been filed by the parties. When reviewing Rule 12(c) motions, a court must review the pleadings under the same standard that applies when reviewing motions to dismiss for failure to state a claim under Rule 12(b)(6). Pisciotta v. Old Nat'l Bancorp, 499 F.3d 629, 633 (7th Cir. 2007). When reviewing a complaint attacked by a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, a court must accept all of the factual allegations as true and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff. Erickson v. Pardus, 551 U.S. 89, 93 (2007). The complaint need not contain detailed facts, but surviving a Rule 12(b)(6) motion "requires more than labels and conclusions Factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555 (2007). "A claim has facial plausibility when the pleaded factual content allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678 (2009) (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556).

DISCUSSION

This Court has original jurisdiction over copyright claims pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1338(a). The Copyright Act states that "[n]o civil action shall be maintained under [its] provisions . . . unless it is commenced within three years after the claim accrued." 17 U.S.C. § 507(b) (emphasis added). The Defendants argue that the recent Supreme Court decision in Petrella v. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Inc., 134 S. Ct. 1662 (2014), determined that a copyright claim “accrue[s]” at the time of the infringing act. The Plaintiff argues that Petrella did not change the Seventh Circuit “discovery rule” that a claim accrues when the injured party discovers or should have discovered with due diligence that an infringing act occurred. The Court must decide which party’s interpretation of the law is correct.

Petrella concerned the classic film Raging Bull, the copyright to which the plaintiff possessed and which she claimed MGM infringed by marketing and distributing it for roughly three decades. 134 S. Ct. at 1670–71. The question before the Supreme Court was limited to the “application of the equitable defense of laches to copyright infringement claims brought within the three-year look-back period.” Id. at 1672. In discussing the Copyright statute as a whole, the Supreme Court stated that in an infringement suit “the limitations period generally begins to run at the point when ‘the plaintiff can file suit and obtain relief.’” Id. at 1669. “A copyright claim thus arises or ‘accrue[s]’ when an infringing act occurs.” Id. But in a footnote, the Supreme Court noted that “nine Court of Appeals have adopted, as an alternative to the incident of injury rule, a ‘discovery rule,’ which starts the limitations period when ‘the plaintiff discovers, or with due diligence should have discovered, the injury that forms the basis for the claim,’” and that it would “not pass[] on the question” of which one was correct. Id. at 1669 n.4. Accordingly, the Supreme Court did not purport to change any accrual laws in its Petrella opinion.

A recent Supreme Court decision confirms this reading of Petrella. See SCA Hygiene Prods. Aktiebolag v. First Quality Baby Prods., LLC, 137 S. Ct. 954 (2017). SCA Hygiene presented the same question—whether the equitable defense of laches brought within a statute’s limitations period—but in the similar context of the Patent Act. Id. at 959. The respondent argued that “the accrual of a claim, the event that triggers the running of a statute of limitations, occurs when a plaintiff knows of a cause of action. Id. at 962. The Supreme Court noted that such a statement is not ordinarily true. As we wrote in Petrella, “[a] claim ordinarily accrues ‘when [a] plaintiff has a complete and present cause of action. . . .’ ” While some claims are subject to a “discovery rule” under which the limitations period begins when the plaintiff discovers or should have discovered the injury giving rise to the claim, that is not a universal feature of statutes of limitations. . . . And in Petrella, we specifically noted that “we have not passed on the question” whether the Copyright Act’s statute of limitations is governed by such a rule.

Id. (citations omitted). SCA Hygiene confirms that the Supreme Court has not weighed in, one way or another, on when a cause of action accrues for purposes of a copyright claim.

The Seventh Circuit follows the “discovery rule” for accrual purposes. Gaiman v. McFarlane, 360 F.3d 644, 653 (7th Cir. 2004). Two Seventh Circuit opinions since Petrella confirm that the Supreme Court’s decision did not abrogate the discovery rule within this Circuit. Like Petrella, Chicago Building Design, P.C. v. Mongolian House, Inc., 770 F.3d 610 (7th Cir. 2014), involved a defendant’s infringing acts that occurred within the “three-year lookback period.” Id. at 616. To determine if the plaintiff’s complaint was time barred, “the right question to ask . . . [wa]s whether the complaint contain[ed] allegations of infringing acts that occurred within the three-year lookback period from the date on which the suit was filed.” Id. However, the court “express[ed] no opinion” as to whether “Petrella abrogate[d] the discovery rule in copyright cases,” id. at 618, and thus it was not central to its holding.¹ In Consumer Health Information Corp. v. Amylin Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 819 F.3d 992 (7th Cir. 2016), the Seventh

Circuit considered a “dispute over copyright ownership.” Id. at 995. The Seventh Circuit stated that “when the gravamen of a copyright suit is a contest over copyright ownership, the claim accrues when the claimant has express notice of a competing claim of ownership.” Id. at 996. This rule for a copyright ownership claim was distinguished from an infringement claim, the latter of which accrued “at the time the wrong occur[ed].” Id. (citing Petrella, 134 S. Ct. at 1969). The Court did not discuss Petrella further or its impact upon the discovery rule.

Although the discovery rule may be abrogated within this Circuit someday, this Court is “bound to follow Seventh Circuit precedent.” Frerck v. Pearson Educ., Inc., 63 F. Supp. 3d 882, 887 n.3 (N.D. Ill. 2014) (holding same). As that precedent stands today, the discovery rule controls the determination of when a copyright infringement claim accrues, and Petrella does not instruct otherwise. Accordingly, the Plaintiff’s claims regarding infringing acts that occurred more than three-years before this action commenced are not barred as a matter of law. The Defendants’ Motion for Partial Judgment on the Pleadings is denied.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Defendants’ Motion for Partial Judgment on the Pleadings [ECF No. 32] is DENIED.

SO ORDERED on May 8, 2017.
