Applies to: David v. Signal (08-1220); Achari v. Signal (13-6218); Samuel v. Signal (14-2811); Joseph v. Signal (14-2826)

ORDER AND REASONS

Before the Court are the Dewan Defendants' Motions for Summary Judgment on the crossclaims of Co-Defendant Signal International, LLC ("Signal").¹ Signal opposes the Motions.² The Dewan Defendants have also filed reply memoranda in further support of the Motions for Summary Judgment. The Court has considered these briefs, the record, and the applicable law, and now issues its ruling. For the reasons that follow, the Motions for Summary Judgment are GRANTED IN PART and DENIED IN PART.

FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

This matter arises out of an allegedly unlawful recruitment scheme used by Signal to recruit and employ citizens of India in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina.³ Plaintiffs,

¹ This Order and Reasons applies to the identical Motions for Summary Judgment currently pending in David v. Signal (08-1220), R. Docs. 2396, 2397; Achari v. Signal (13-6218), R. Docs. 504, 507; Samuel v. Signal (14-2811), R. Docs. 219, 220; and Joseph v. Signal (14-2826), R. Docs. 216, 217. The motions were originally filed by Defendant Malvern C. Burnett, the Gulf Coast Immigration Law Center, LLC, and the Law Offices of Malvern C. Burnett, APC ("the Burnett Defendants"). Defendants Sachin Dewan and Dewan Consultants, Pvt. Ltd. ("the Dewan Defendants"), thereafter joined in the motions. The Burnett Defendants are no longer defendants to this action. Accordingly, for purposes of this Order and Reasons, the Court treats the Motions for Summary Judgment solely as that of the Dewan Defendants.

² R. Doc. 513 (in the Achari cases) (13-6218). For simplicity, the Court, where necessary, refers to the Motions for Summary Judgment and related briefs by citing the document numbers assigned those filings in Achari v. Signal (13-6218). The document numbers related to the Motions in the other relevant cases are reflected, supra, in footnote 1.

a number of the recruited Indian workers, allege that Signal, among others, recruited Plaintiffs to work at Signal's facilities in Pascagoula, Mississippi, post-Hurricane Katrina.⁴ Signal allegedly promised Plaintiffs that, in connection with the recruitment scheme, it would assist Plaintiffs in acquiring permanent residence in the United States.⁵ Plaintiffs contend, however, that Signal never followed through with these promises or took steps to assist Plaintiffs in obtaining green cards.⁶ Moreover, Plaintiffs argue, inter alia, that they experienced discriminatory treatment at the hands of Signal and were forced to live in deplorable conditions.⁷

The present Motions for Summary Judgment concern the crossclaims levied by Signal against the Burnett Defendants and the Dewan Defendants in (1) David v. Signal (08-1220); (2) the consolidated cases in Achari v. Signal (13-6218);⁸ (3) Samuel v. Signal (14-2811); and (4) Joseph v. Signal (14-2826). Judgment was entered on the crossclaims in the first David trial⁹ against Signal and in favor of the Burnett and Dewan Defendants.¹⁰ The Dewan Defendants contend in the present Motions that, because “identical” crossclaims were alleged and adjudicated in the first David trial,¹¹ Signal's crossclaims in David—with respect to the remaining David Plaintiffs—and in the consolidated Achari cases, as well as the Samuel and Joseph cases, are barred by the doctrine of res judicata.

LEGAL STANDARDS

A. Summary Judgment Standard

Summary judgment is appropriate only “if the movant shows that there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.”¹² “An issue is material if its resolution could affect the outcome of the action.”¹³ When assessing whether a material factual dispute exists, the Court considers “all of the evidence in the record but refrains from making credibility determinations or weighing the evidence.”¹⁴ All reasonable inferences are drawn in favor of the non-moving party.¹⁵ There is no genuine issue of material fact if, even viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the non-moving party, no reasonable trier of fact could find for the non-moving party, thus entitling the moving party to judgment as a matter of law.¹⁶

B. Res Judicata Standard

“Under the doctrine of res judicata, parties and their privies are precluded from relitigating claims that were or should have been raised in a prior action and have reached a final judgment on the merits.”¹⁷ For the doctrine of res judicata to apply, four requirements must be satisfied: (1) the parties must be identical in both suits, or the parties must be in privity with parties who were identical in both suits; (2) the prior judgment must have been rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction; (3) the prior judgment must have been a final judgment on the merits; and (4) the same claim or cause of action must be involved in both suits.¹⁸

DISCUSSION

It is undisputed that the first two requirements of the res judicata analysis are satisfied in this case.¹⁹ The Dewan Defendants and Signal agree that (1) the parties in the crossclaims are identical or in privity; and (2) the crossclaims in the first David trial were decided by a court of competent jurisdiction. The principal disputes with respect to the present Motions for Summary Judgment concern the third and fourth requirements of the res judicata analysis. The Court will address each requirement, in turn, below.

A. Final Judgment on the Merits

The third requirement of the res judicata inquiry, as recited above, requires that the prior judgment be a final judgment on the merits.²⁰ The Dewan Defendants contend it is “self evident” that the prior judgment on Signal’s crossclaims in the first David trial is final and on the merits, noting that a “verdict was issued as a result of a trial o[n] the merits and Judgment was issued pursuant to Rule 54(b).”²¹ Signal, on the other hand, disputes the assertion that the first David trial resulted in a final judgment on its crossclaims.²² Signal argues that, because it has appealed the Court’s judgment on its crossclaims, the judgment is not final for purposes of res judicata.²³ More specifically,

¹⁸ See, e.g., Swate v. Hartwell (In re Swate), 99 F.3d 1282, 1286 (5th Cir. 1996);

²¹ R. Doc. 504-2 at 5 (in the Achari cases) (13-6218).

²² R. Doc. 513 at 5 (in the Achari cases) (13-6218).

²³ R. Doc. 513 at 5 (in the Achari cases). Signal states that the pendency of its appeal should “defeat” the finality argument. R. Doc. 513 at 5 (in the Achari cases) (13-6218).

Signal contends the pendency of an appeal renders the appealed-from judgment “insufficiently final” for res judicata purposes.

Under Fifth Circuit case law, it is immaterial for res judicata purposes that a prior judgment has been appealed. The Fifth Circuit has specifically held that “[a] case pending appeal is res judicata and entitled to full faith and credit unless and until reversed on appeal.”²⁴ Signal’s argument to the contrary, that its taking of an appeal renders the Court’s judgment “insufficiently final,” is incorrect.²⁵ Signal’s appeal has, for res judicata purposes, no bearing on the finality of the Court’s judgment on Signal’s crossclaims in the first David trial. As a result, the Court finds the third requirement of the res judicata inquiry satisfied. The judgment on Signal’s crossclaims in the first David trial is, for purposes of res judicata, final and on the merits. The Court now turns to the fourth requirement.

B. Same Claims or Causes of Action

The fourth requirement of the res judicata inquiry, as recited above, requires that the same claims or causes of action be involved in both suits.²⁶ To determine whether two suits involve the same claims or causes of action, the Fifth Circuit instructs courts to use the “transactional test” of the Restatement (Second) of Judgments, § 24.²⁷ Under the transactional test, a prior judgment’s preclusive effect extends “to all or any part of the transaction, or series of connected transactions, out of which the [original] action arose.”²⁸ Which grouping of facts constitutes a “transaction” or a “series of transactions” must “be determined pragmatically, giving weight to such considerations as whether the facts are related in time, space, origin, or motivation, whether they form a convenient trial unit, and whether their treatment as a unit conforms to the parties’ expectations or business understanding or usage.”²⁹ The critical issue under the transactional test is whether the two actions or suits are based on the “same nucleus of operative facts.”³⁰

In the first David trial, Signal’s crossclaims were enumerated in 10 separate counts.³¹ Counts 1 through 8 were Signal’s crossclaims for fraud, breach of fiduciary duty, malpractice, two counts of breach of contract, unfair trade practices, detrimental reliance, and tortious interference with a contractual relationship.³² Counts 9 and 10 were Signal’s crossclaims for indemnity against the Burnett and Dewan Defendants.³³ Signal does not dispute that Counts 1 through 8 arise out of the “same nucleus of operative facts” as its corresponding, non-indemnity crossclaims in the remaining portion of the David case, the consolidated Achari cases, and the Samuel and Joseph cases.³⁴ Indeed, Signal concedes that its non-indemnity crossclaims in these cases satisfy the fourth requirement of the res judicata inquiry and involve the same claims or causes of action as Signal’s non-indemnity crossclaims adjudicated in the first David trial. Because the parties agree that the first and second requirements of the res judicata analysis are met, and because the Court has found that the third and fourth requirements are met, Signal’s non-indemnity crossclaims are barred by the doctrine of res judicata as a result of the judgment in the first David trial.

The indemnity counts of Signal’s crossclaims—Counts 9 and 10 in the first David trial—require a more lengthy and involved analysis.³⁵ Signal argues, in sum, that its indemnity crossclaims against the Burnett and Dewan Defendants in the first David trial were not based on the same nucleus of operative facts as Signal’s indemnity crossclaims in the remaining portion of the David case, the consolidated Achari cases, and the Samuel and Joseph cases.³⁶ Signal contends its crossclaims for indemnity necessarily involve facts specific to each individual Plaintiff and that the “facts surrounding a given Plaintiff’s recruitment” are dispositive of Signal’s crossclaims for indemnity in each particular case.³⁷ As such, Signal avers that, because facts specific to the remaining Plaintiffs in David, the Plaintiffs in Achari, and the Plaintiffs in Samuel and Joseph were not presented and adjudicated at the first David trial, Signal’s indemnity crossclaims should not be barred by the doctrine of res judicata.³⁸

The Dewan Defendants, on the other hand, argue that, with respect to Signal’s indemnity crossclaims, “the category of damages, the alleged basis of recovery, and the operative facts on which [Signal] bases its claim for recovery are the same as presented in David.”³⁹ The Dewan Defendants maintain the “only difference” is the “amount of damages, if any, for which Signal may be held responsible.”⁴⁰ The Dewan Defendants do not agree that Signal’s indemnity crossclaims against the Burnett and Dewan Defendants are “plaintiff specific” and turn on the particular facts surrounding the recruitment of each Plaintiff.

The Court agrees with Signal. Signal’s crossclaims for indemnity against the Burnett and Dewan Defendants do require a “plaintiff-specific” analysis. In reaching this conclusion, the Court notes that, in the first David trial, the portion of the Jury Verdict Form which addressed Signal’s crossclaims for indemnity against the Burnett and Dewan Defendants required an analysis of the facts and circumstances unique to the Plaintiffs in that case.⁴¹ Specifically, with respect to Signal’s indemnity crossclaims, the Jury Verdict Form referenced the “legal obligation” owed by Signal to the “Plaintiffs in the main action” and whether, “in all fairness,” the Burnett or Dewan Defendants should indemnify Signal for that legal obligation owed by Signal to those specific Plaintiffs.⁴² Accordingly, in reaching a verdict on Signal’s indemnity crossclaims in the first David trial, the jury was required to consider the specific circumstances and testimony of the Plaintiffs and determine whether the Burnett and Dewan Defendants were required to indemnify Signal for Signal’s conduct with respect to those five David Plaintiffs whose claims were presented in the first trial.

At the first David trial and, specifically, during cross examination, Signal elicited testimony from each Plaintiff as to the conduct of the Burnett and Dewan Defendants and how each Plaintiff’s experience with Burnett and Dewan was unique and distinct. For example, each Plaintiff was asked about unauthorized actions of Burnett and Dewan that were relevant to whether the Burnett and Dewan Defendants would be required to indemnify Signal for Signal's conduct vis-à-vis those David Plaintiffs.

The Court is not persuaded by the argument, set forth by the Dewan Defendants, that Signal's indemnity crossclaims involve only an assessment of Signal's and the Burnett and Dewan Defendants' conduct vis-à-vis each other.⁴³ As stated above, whether the Burnett and Dewan Defendants were required by law to indemnify Signal in the first David trial turned on the particular facts and circumstances surrounding the individual Plaintiffs in that trial. Signal's indemnity crossclaims in the first David trial are necessarily distinct and do not involve the same claims or causes of action as Signal's indemnity crossclaims in the remaining portion of David, the consolidated Achari cases, or the Samuel or Joseph cases. Signal's crossclaims for indemnity against the Burnett and Dewan Defendants are not barred by the doctrine of res judicata.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court finds that Signal's crossclaims for indemnity against the Dewan Defendants in the remaining portion of the David case, the consolidated Achari cases, and the Samuel and Joseph cases are not barred by the doctrine of res judicata. Signal's non-indemnity crossclaims are barred under the doctrine of res judicata.

Accordingly;

IT IS ORDERED that the Dewan Defendants' Motions for Summary Judgment⁴⁴ are hereby GRANTED IN PART and DENIED IN PART. Signal's non-indemnity crossclaims are barred by the doctrine of res judicata. Signal's crossclaims for indemnity against the Burnett and Dewan Defendants are, for the reasons stated above, not barred by the doctrine of res judicata.
