Subject: WLI Reservations Rewards / Flowers.com FRAUD

At Easter Time I purchased Easter items for my children and grandchildren through Flowers.Com. And, in the last couple of days I have been checking my Bank One checking account / debit card and discovered a $7.00 charge from a company WLI Reservation Rewards which I have no idea what it was for. I did a computer search on "WLI Reservation Rewards" and discovered that this is a scam involving Flowers.Com selling information including my debit card number to WLI Reservation Rewards. I am being charged for a service which I know nothing about or want. When I attempted to contact WLI Reservation Rewards at 1-800-890-4892 the person answering demanded my e-mail address ( devildog65@wyan.org ), which I gave her. Then, the WLI representative demanded to know my debit card number which I did not feel was a wise thing to give up to WLI.

How do I stop these charges to my Bank One checking account / debit card; and how do I get reimbursed for charges already made to my account, and how do I cancel my UNWANTED account with WLI Reservation Rewards?

I need a response immediately since, I am in the process of moving to Arizona by June 15, 2003.

Sincerely,

Barry W. Arcala

FYI

I also went to my branch office of Bank One and file a dispute with the debit that WLI made against my checking account / debit card. And, I canceled my debit card and had Bank One issue me a new one.

Hopefully, this will stop WLI from fraudulently debiting my checking account. I hope that words gets out to the general population about this WLI scam and WLI's association with Flowers.Com.

Dear Mr. Arcala:

Our office has reviewed your complaint against WLI Reservations & Flowers.com. I have located addresses for both companies and will contact them on your behalf.

In your complaint, you questioned what your rights were recovering the charges already made to your account. When we contact the company, we will see if we can get them to voluntarily refund you the money. If they refuse to resolve this matter through our office, you may either take them to Small Claims Court or consult with a private attorney.

Since your banking information has been provided to WLI without your authorization, you may want to close your current bank account and reopen under a new number. This will not only prevent WLI from making further withdrawals but will protect you should WLI or Flowers.com give your information out to other companies.

In the meantime, I will fax your complaint to both companies today. Please notify our office of your new mailing address once you have moved to Arizona in case we have trouble contacting you by e-mail.

Re: Unauthorized Charges to Credit Card – Web Loyalty

To Whom It May Concern:

I am writing to complaint about abusive and misleading practices by Web Loyalty, 6 Corporate Drive, Suite 450, Shelton, CT 06484. This company offers, as a misleading come-on, discounts on local entertainment as a "thank you" for making travel arrangements on travelocity.com. I accessed their website once to view the "free" discounts, and was, unknown to me, enrolled in a monthly service. To date, this company has charged me 384.00 in monthly fees for a service I do not use, have no use for, and find of no value. I called to complain, and was offered a refund of one month's fee, a paltry $7.00. I protested that their records would clearly show that I have not used their service since the "free" offer at the beginning. The representative, Don, claimed to not have that technology. I run a web-based service, and I know that they can tell who is logged to their site and how long they stay. This technology is standard.

Their practice of luring customers with "free" offers, which are quickly converted to a paying service is misleading, abusive, violates state advertising laws and federal laws concerning unauthorized charges. They count on people taking advantage of the "free" look, then neglecting to ever cancel. How many other consumers are paying for this service and receiving nothing??

I demand a full refund of all fees paid. Your prompt attention to this complaint, and investigation into these practices is greatly appreciated.

Sincerely,

Susan K. Sullaro, JD, FLMI

Complaint Detail Information

Message sent to Hon. Joe Schwarz, US Congress:

The time is past due to reform the laws to protect citizens from the current trend in scams. Thousands of so called "companies" are scamming American citizens out of millions through internet and credit card scams. We were recently scammed by "Reservation Rewards" @ Web Loyalty.Com of 101 Merritt #7, 7th Floor, Norwalk, CT 06851. They obtained our credit card information from Chadwicks Clothing (a once trusted company) by redeeming a coupon. They charged $18 to my credit card. In the conversation with a supervisor (Jeff Brown @ 1800 732-7031) I discovered that I had been charged $63 by an affiliate company without specific approval. Last month I investigated almost $200 of charges to my daughters checking account by the other fraudulent companies. They always have a NEARLY fool proof system which has been devised by a panel of dishonest attorneys to create legal loopholes. I have been asked by friends and family to investigate (I'm a former cop and still work in law enforcement) six such transactions. Each have the same MO and operate under false identities with a system which makes tracing a specific person very challenging. Please help protect Americans from these scams. I would be willing to discuss the information I have obtained and help shed light on these "criminals".

Complaint: While reviewing our November credit card statement my wife discovered a $9 charge to an unknown source. My wife immediately called to complain and discovered that Reservation Rewards received our credit card information from Chadwicks when she redeemed a $10 coupon through Chadwicks (on-line) when purchasing some clothing. She demanded an immediate credit and called Chadwicks to cancel our business with them. On our next credit card statement, we discovered that there had been two $9 charges paid to WLI*Reservation Rewards. On 1/3/05, I called and talked with "Mia #61060" who ended up hanging up on me. I called and demanded to speak to a supervisor. A "Jeff Brown" came on the phone and explained that by entering our e-mail address into a dialog box twice constituted an electronic signature and therefore an authorization to receive our credit card information from Chadwicks. I advised him that he was to determine any and all companies and affiliates associated with his organization who had ever charged my credit card account. He discovered that "Biz Rate" has previously charged my credit card for $63. He refused to disclose how Biz Rate obtained my credit card data. He mentioned another company called "Travel Values Plus" but did not disclose if they had charged my card. He stated that he would refund my money. I requested and obtained the address to Mr. Brown's office (P.O. Box 855, Shelton, CT 06484) and the corporate office as indicated above and advised him that I would pursue legal remedy through state and federal resources. We are tired of being victimized and scammed by these criminals who think we will continue to sit by while they steal from us. I think of the thousands of unsuspecting who don't check their statements or feel that taking action would be useless. I for one am willing to do whatever it takes to stop the scams. I will assist in any way possible and will offer my services to anyone to help them recover THEIR money from these crooks. I look forward to hearing from you, as this matter can no longer be ignored.

Dear [REDACTED]

Thank you for providing information about the above-referenced company. Although our office is prohibited by law from acting as your private attorney, we will attempt to assist you by contacting the company and requesting an explanation of the matter you reported. Missouri law does not permit us to represent you in a private dispute, nor does it allow our office to sue solely to recover your losses or damages. Thus, if your complaint can be mediated, our goal is to resolve the complaint through correspondence.

Please be patient and allow a minimum of thirty days for us to obtain a response from the company. If you have additional information, please notify our office in writing at Consumer Complaint Unit, Office of the Attorney General, P.O. Box 899, Jefferson City, Missouri 65102. Think your credit card number is safe even when you aren't asked to submit it while registering for something on the Net? Think again.

E-commerce giant IAC/InterActive made waves Tuesday when it announced the spin-off of its high-profile travel properties, including Hotels.com. They'll be part of a separate entity under the Expedia moniker.

For its part, Hotels.com is partnered with a Connecticut direct- marketing firm called Webloyalty.com.

Hotels.com is one of about 70 Internet heavyweights affiliated with Webloyalty, including travel service Priceline.com, movie- ticket vendor Fandango.com and shopping site Half.com.

And here's where consumers may want to sit up and take notice.

Webloyalty is able to obtain people's credit card numbers directly from many of its partners and will charge monthly fees for a service some people might not realize they've signed up for.

Once movie tickets are purchased at Fandango.com, for example, a link is presented to a special reward. That link leads to a page on Webloyalty's site promising $10 off your next Fandango purchase plus other discounts.

All you have to do is provide your e-mail address.

A Google search turns up dozens of people who say that they never meant to join Webloyalty's "reservation rewards" program.

These people subsequently discovered that the company was deducting between $7 and $9 a month from their credit cards even though they didn't think they'd signed up for the rewards plan.

Rick Fernandes, Webloyalty's chief exec, acknowledged that numerous people complain that they never intended to enroll in his company's program.

"But we deal with millions of consumers a year," he told me. "Even though the number of complaints seems large, it's actually a small percentage."

Fernandes said privately held Webloyalty has 1.3 million members and sees about $100 million a year in revenue.

"The great, great majority of people who join have no issue with what's going on," he said.

Be that as it may, he confirmed that arrangements exist with at least half of Webloyalty's 70 corporate clients to obtain consumers' credit card numbers without the individual being asked to provide it.

again provide their credit card number along with other personal information.

Hotels.com insisted that its customers must understand clearly what they were getting themselves into.

"We think the best way to offer a service like this is to have customers give their credit card information themselves," said Andrea Riggs, a spokeswoman for IAC, Hotels.com's parent.

But for many other Webloyalty clients, including Fandango.com, customers are asked only to submit their e-mail address twice as a form of electronic signature.

The fine print of Webloyalty's verbiage-heavy solicitation says charges "will automatically continue for just $9 a month billed by Reservation Rewards to the credit card or deducted from the debit card information you used at CLIENT today."

In slightly less awkward words, submitting your e-mail address will result in Webloyalty obtaining your credit card number from Fandango or another client and beginning the monthly billing process.

Consumer advocates say this is a system virtually guaranteed to cause people to unwittingly be charged for services they had no intention of paying for.

"There's no reasonable way to induce people to pay for something without specifically asking them to provide their billing information," said Gail Hillebrand, a senior attorney with Consumers Union in San Francisco.

Webloyalty's Fernandes countered that many consumers are grateful for the convenience of not having to re-enter their billing information.

"There are people who are happy they don't have to put in their credit card number again," he said. "They just want to click."

Webloyalty sends e-mails to subscribers before a 30-day trial period ends alerting them that billing is about to begin. But Fernandes acknowledged that many people might overlook such messages as spam.

"There's that chance," he said. "I understand it."

For this reason, Fernandes said, Webloyalty's policy is to refund money to anyone who asks. The number to call is (800) 732-7031.

The catch, of course, is that it's up to consumers to spot the monthly charge on their credit card statements and go to the trouble of chasing after some company they might not recall dealing with.

"There are some people who don't read any of the details and just click 'yes' and become members," Fernandes said. "We try to do what we can do to help them."

are asked up front for their billing info, thus assuring that they know they're making a financial commitment?

Fernandes said no. "There are some people who are confused," he said. "There are many more who are not."

But he did have this to add: "People need to make sure they know what they're reading. Read the details of what you're signing up for."

He's right about that much at least.

We were victims of this scam. My wife shopped at joanns.com and got signed up for this service of highly dubious value.

We filed a report with our state consumer affairs office and got a response from reservation rewards attorney.

You can read how the scam works elsewhere on this site but I suggest you contact your state consumer affairs to require reservation rewards to pay the attorney everythime they have to write a 10 page response like they did in our case.

Web Firms Sharing Credit Card Numbers

Last night, we appeared in a DC Fox-5 (WTTG) investigative story (transcript) exposing how web sites share credit card numbers with third parties and the third parties bill the credit cards for products the consumer didn't knowingly order. It's an old scam that's moved from telemarketers to the Internet.

According to the story, one of the victims bought a ticket from Ticketmaster.Com, then clicked on a "Rewards" popup, looked at the site that appeared -- thought "No Thanks" -- and then left it. Some time later she found that her credit card had been billed. In small print on the first site, she'd allegedly "agreed" that if she clicked the popup her credit card would be billed for a trial offer for a $7/month club under terms described partly on the screen. The small print, supposedly buttressed by more small print in the "Privacy Policy" and "Terms and Conditions" pages apparently told her that Ticketmaster could share her credit card information with the rewards firm if she used the site to buy a ticket. Two other victims had stories about other web merchants in the Fox piece, called "Terms and Conditions."

Identical scandals associated with so-called "free-to-pay" scams by telemarketers (some obtaining the information not from merchants but, incredibly, from regulated banks), resulted in hefty regulatory activity. "Free-to-pay" means a trial offer-- where you must cancel your credit card within a certain period of time or you are billed. The problem is exacerbated where a consumer hasn't given out his credit card number in the first place and is unaware that the telemarketer has it. State Attorneys General call this "pre-acquired account telemarketing" and it turns a purchase upside down. If you haven't given out a credit card

After pressure was brought by state Attorneys General (their comments), the Federal Trade Commission amended the Telemarketing Sales Rule (TSR) prohibiting telemarketers from billing consumer credit cards in a similar way. The telemarketers are now required to ask consumers to read back at least part of their credit card number as a way of documenting that they have actually agreed to a transaction.

As the AGs argued in their comments to FTC: "The essential characteristic of [preacquired account telemarketing] is the ability of the telemarketer to charge the consumer's account without traditional forms of consent."

So, in its final rule, the FTC said the following, for telemarketers:

"(i) In any telemarketing transaction involving preacquired account information and a free-to-pay conversion feature, the seller or telemarketer must: (A) obtain from the customer, at a minimum, the last four (4) digits of the account number to be charged; (B) obtain from the customer his or her express agreement to be charged for the goods or services and to be charged using the account number..."

Now we need a similar rule for the web that is based on real understanding and real consent, not simple clicking.

Comments

I ordered flowers on the FTB.Com site. The next thing you know I was a member of Reservation Rewards.com. They charged my credit card $10.00. I cancelled (which was easy) but they would not refund the $10.00. I called FTB. They said they could do nothing – that I apparently checked a box signing up. That I don't remember.

I'm furious at the info I've found on this and the fact that nothing has already been done! Just found out I've been charged $10 for 5 months for Reservation Rewards after signing up for Classmates.com. I called the RR customer service # and got a robotic idiot on the other end who gave me the typical "it isn't policy to return it all, but we'll go ahead and do it" that I've read so much about tonight. I also wrote Classmates and expressed my disgust with them as well as demanded my membership be cancelled and my money from THEM refunded as well. How can they possibly parter with these people? Webloyalty is the parent company of Reservation Rewards. Increased in revenue by 56% in one year...No FREAKIN WONDER!!!! People don't even know they are being charged. And people what
