ORDER DENYING DEFENDANT’S MOTION FOR JUDGEMENT ON THE PLEADINGS, OR IN THE ALTERNATIVE, FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT OR ADJUDICATION RE STANDING

BIKRAM CHOUDHURY,

Defendant.

On April 14, 2004, a hearing was held on the motion of defendant Bikram Choudhury (“Choudhury”) for judgment on the pleadings, or in the alternative, for summary judgment or adjudication regarding standing and other jurisdictional issues. Plaintiff Open Source Yoga Unity (“OSYU”) appeared through its counsel Elizabeth Rader, and Choudhury appeared through his counsel Robert Ungar. Having read the papers and carefully considered the relevant legal authority and oral argument, the court hereby rules as follows.

BACKGROUND

Choudhury has compiled a yoga routine known as “Bikram’s Basic Yoga System,” or “Bikram Yoga,” one of the more popular forms of hot yoga. Bikram Yoga is a combination of a specific sequence of yoga postures, breathing exercises, temperature and a dialogue compiled by Choudhury. Choudhury holds various copyrights and trademarks related to Bikram Yoga, and has licensed many of his former students to teach Bikram Yoga.

Some yoga instructors have varied the Bikram Yoga routine. Consequently, in 2002 Choudhury began to send cease and desist letters to yoga instructors, demanding they stop exploiting his copyrighted and trademarked intellectual property. On February 5, 2003,

1 Choudhury posted text on his corporate website that announced the registration of his Bikram
2 Yoga copyright and detailed the legal consequences for those who might violate his copyright.

3 In summer of 2002, Vanessa Calder (“Calder”), started an informal group called Hot 4 Yoga Alliance (“HYA”) to communicate with like minded people and build a mailing list. On 5 February 24, 2003, OSYU was incorporated as a California nonprofit Mutual Benefit 6 Corporation, and on March 21, 2003, Calder sent an email to the HYA email list announcing 7 the formation of OSYU. This email explained the purpose of OSYU and invited recipients to 8 join in an open conference call, which was held on March 25, 2003. In sum, the email 9 explained that OSYU was created to help enlist “the courts” in protecting “our” rights to 10 practice and teach yoga in a “free marketplace.” The email continued, “we will seek to . . .
11 define what, if any, rights or exclusivity . . . Choudhury may assert or enforce regarding Bikram 12 Yoga, Hot Yoga,” or any other yoga.

13 Beginning in late March 2003, OSYU began to hold “strategy conference calls” about 14 once a month. Participating in these calls were Calder; the McCauleys, Calder’s parents and 15 owners of yoga studios, who had received a cease and desist letter from Choudhury; Jimmy 16 Barkan (“Barkan”); Kimberly Clark (“Clark”); Brandon Hartsell (“Hartsell”) and “several other” 17 yoga studio owners.

18 On or about April 6, 2003, OSYU sent out a mailing to approximately 200 yoga
19 teachers and studios. The recipients included HYA mailing list members and other yoga 20 studios specifically targeted by Calder. The mailing included a formal letter from OSYU’s 21 attorney and incorporator, James Harrison (“Harrison”), describing OSYU and its purpose.
22 The letter re-stated the purposes of OSYU spelled out in Calder’s Mach 21 email, and stated 23 specifically that “OSYU was formed to provide a common voice, and the pooling of resources, 24 to oppose the litigious position . . . Choudhury is taking against the Yoga community.” The 25 letter listed OSYU’s postal and web address. Included in the mailing was a flyer “welcoming” 26 OSYU.

27 On April 8, 2003, Calder sent an email to the HYA email list announcing the launch of 28

1 OSYU's website. This email also encouraged recipients to support "our community" by 2 donating to the OSYU legal fund. Finally, the email encouraged recipients to "spread the 3 word" about OSYU. A second email from Calder on April 8, 2003, informed the HYA email list 4 that they had been transferred to the OSYU mailing list.

5 On June 13, 2003, Choudhury settled pending litigation with the Morrisons, yoga studio
6 owners who had received one of Choudhury's cease and desist letters. Choudhury's website 7 advertised the settlement as a significant legal victory and espoused that the "imposters" who 8 exploit Bikram Yoga "must and will be stopped." In response, OSYU held a June meeting 9 where it was decided that OSYU would file the current declaratory relief action.

10 This action was filed on July 9, 2003. Prior to that date, OSYU had the following 11 characteristics. In declarations and affidavits filed in support of OSYU, no less than eight 12 individuals, including Calder, McCauley, Barkan, Hartsell, Clark, Erin Thibeault, Darla Magee
13 and Ted Grand, claim to be members of OSYU since before July 9, 2003.<sup>1</sup> Prior to that date, 14 OSYU also had received donations from 16 different individuals and organizations, ranging in 15 value from $15.00 to $1,125.00. In addition to the purposes of OSYU as explained in its April 16 mailing, OSYU's specific legal purpose, stated in its Articles of Incorporation, was to 17 "communicate, and defend in any legal way possible, the idea that no form or style of Yoga is 18 proprietary as it can not be owned, transferred, franchised, trademarked or copyrighted."

19 OSYU's first and only director, Calder, was appointed/elected to the board of directors 20 by OSYU's incorporator on the following day, July 10, 2003. On July 11, 2003 OSYU filed a 21 Statement of Information for a Domestic Nonprofit Corporation with the California Secretary of 22 State, listing Calder as the CEO and Secretary of OSYU and Harrison as CFO and Agent for 23 Service of Process. OSYU amended its Articles of Incorporation on July 15, 2003, changing 24 its corporate form to a non-profit Public Benefit Corporation. OSYU adopted its first set of 25 Bylaws on July 29, 2003. On December 18, 2003, William McCauley replaced Harrison as 26 CFO.

27 _____
28 <sup>1</sup>Choudhury's objections to these affidavits are overruled.

1 ANALYSIS

2 Choudhury moves for judgment on the pleadings or for summary judgment, alleging that 3 OSYU lacks associational standing because of the inadequacy of OSYU's purported 4 membership, and because the current action is not germane to the purposes of OSYU. Even if 5 OSYU has standing, Choudhury argues that OSYU's declaratory relief action should be 6 dismissed because i) OSYU members have unclean hands, ii) judgment in this action would 7 not forestall duplicitous litigation, iii) the nature of relief sought by OSYU is inequitable to 8 Choudhury, iv) OSYU has failed to join necessary and/or indispensable parties, and v) the 9 affirmative claim of copyright misuse is not cognizable.<sup>2</sup>

10 A. General Legal Standard

11 Article III of the Constitution limits the jurisdiction of federal courts to "cases" and 12 "controversies." Casey v. Lewis, 4 F.3d 1516, 1519 (9th Cir. 1993). Standing is an essential 13 component of the case or controversy requirement. Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S.
 14 555, 560 (1992). OSYU bears the burden of alleging facts demonstrating that it is a "proper 15 party to invoke judicial resolution of the dispute." U.S. v. Hays, 515 U.S. 737, 743 (1995).
 16 Thus, OSYU must demonstrate the constitutional minimum of Article III standing. Because 17 OSYU seeks declaratory and injunctive relief only, it must show a "very significant possibility of 18 future harm." Id.

19 An association has standing to bring suit on behalf of its members when: i) its 20 members would otherwise have standing to sue in their own right,<sup>3</sup> ii) the interests it seeks to 21 protect are germane to the organization's purpose, and iii) neither the claim asserted nor the

 23 <sup>2</sup>Choudhury improperly raises a number of legal arguments in his reply brief, which were 24 not raised in his moving papers. The court will not entertain these claims, including Choudhury's
 "suggestion" for sanctions. Any desire for sanctions must be made known pursuant to the dictates of Civil Local Rule 7-8.

25 <sup>3</sup>In order to have standing, an individual must have first suffered an "injury-in-fact" to a 26 legally protected interest that is both "concrete and particularized" and "actual or imminent;" 27 second, there must be a causal connection between the injury and the conduct complained of; 28 third, it must be "likely"—not merely "speculative"—that the injury will be "redressed by a favorable decision." San Diego County Gun Rights Committee v. Reno, 98 F.3d 1121, 1126 (9th Cir. 1996) (citing Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560-61).

1 relief requested requires the participation of individual members in the lawsuit. Individuals for 2 Responsible Gov't, Inc. v. Washoe County, 110 F.3d 699, 702 (9th Cir. 1997) (quoting Hunt v.
3 Washington State Apple Advertising Comm'n, 432 U.S. 333, 343 (1977)). Associational 4 standing is particularly appropriate where “the association is seeking to represent the 5 interests which are central to the purpose of the organization” and “where the relief sought is 6 some form of prospective remedy, such as declaratory judgment, which will inure to the benefit 7 of the organization’s membership.” Rodriguez v. California Highway Patrol, 89 F. Supp. 2d 8 1131, 1135 (N.D. Cal. 2000) (quoting Peick v. Pension Benefit Guar. Corp., 724 F.2d 1247, 9 1259 (7th Cir. 1983)). Absent both purpose and members, however, an association lacks any 10 standing to sue. Individuals for Responsible Gov't, Inc., 110 F.3d at 702.

11 In response to a motion for summary judgment on the ground of lack of standing, the 12 plaintiff must set forth, by affidavit or other evidence, specific facts that are to be taken as true 13 for purposes of the motion. Lujan, 504 U.S. at 561. If the affidavits on the summary judgment 14 motion do not go beyond the allegations of the complaint relative to establishing standing, the 15 analysis of the question is no different than it would be at the pleading stage. See Simon v.
16 Eastern Kentucky Welfare Rights Organization, 426 U.S. 26 (1976).

17 Generally, standing is determined by the facts that exist at the time the complaint is 18 filed. Clark v. City of Lakewood, 259 F.3d 996, 1006 (9th Cir. 2001). Lack of standing is a 19 jurisdictional defect (Bender v. Williamsport Area School Dist., 475 U.S. 534, 541 (1986)), 20 and standing is a necessary element of federal court jurisdiction. Big Country Foods, Inc. v.
21 Board of Educ. of Anchorage School Dist., 952 F.2d 1173, 1176 (9th Cir. 1992).

22 B. Discussion

23 Choudhury advances several arguments attacking OSYU’s associational standing 24 based on the status of OSYU’s purported members. Specifically relating to membership, 25 Choudhury claims: i) OSYU had no members on the date OSYU filed its complaint, ii) OSYU is 26 currently a “sham organization” that lacks indicia of a traditional membership organization, 27 and iii) the individual members of OSYU would not have standing to prosecute this action in 28

1 their own right.

2 1) Legal Standard for Membership

3 The California Corporations Code defines “member” as “any person who, pursuant to a 4 specific provision of a corporation’s articles or bylaws, has the right to vote for the election of 5 a director or directors or on a disposition of . . . the assets of a corporation or on a merger or 6 on a dissolution. . . .” ‘Member’ also means any person who is designated in the articles or 7 bylaws as a member and, “pursuant to a specific provision of a corporation’s articles or 8 bylaws, has the right to vote on changes to the articles or bylaws.” Cal. Corp. Code § 5056.
9 The Public Benefit Corporations Code § 5332, and the Nonprofit Religious Corporations 10 Code recognize that those types of corporations may refer to associated persons as 11 “members” even though the associated persons do not meet the definition of member in § 12 5056.

13 The cases interpreting associational standing take a broader view of what constitutes 14 membership. In Hunt v. Washington State Apple Advertising Comm’n, the Supreme Court 15 rejected the defendant’s argument that the Washington State Apple Advertising Commission 16 was precluded from establishing the requisites of associational standing because it had no 17 “members” under state law. 432 U.S. 333, 342 (1977). Rather, the Supreme Court 18 performed a functional analysis and found that the apple growers and dealers possessed “all 19 the indicia of membership,” and that “the Commission represents the State’s growers and 20 dealers and provides the means by which they express their collective views and protect their 21 collective interests.” Id. at 344-45.

22 Moreover, the Ninth Circuit has held that an organization’s form under state law does 23 not affect its federal standing. Sierra Association for Environment v. Federal Energy 24 Regulatory Commission, 744 F.2d 661, 662 (9th Cir. 1984) (holding that a suspended non-25 profit corporation had capacity to sue as an unincorporated association under Fed. R. Civ 26 Proc. 17(b)(1), and any incapacity under California law was accordingly irrelevant). Thus, the 27 “indicia of membership” test is the correct test to apply to determine whether a corporation, 28

1 despite its failure to meet state law requirements, has “members” whose interests it can 2 represent in federal court. See Friends of the Earth, Inc. v. Chevron Chemical Co., 129 F.3d
3 826, 829 (5th Cir. 1997); Public Interest Research Group of New Jersey, Inc. v. Magnesium 4 Elektron, Inc., 123 F.3d 111, 119 (3d Cir. 1997).

5 The Hunt “indicia of membership” test looks to whether the organization represents the 6 purported members and provides the means by which the members express their collective 7 views and protect their collective interests. Hunt, 432 U.S. at 344-45. Generally, the test looks 8 to see if the organization in question is the “functional equivalent of a traditional membership 9 organization,” whereas the test specifically looks at whether an organization’s purported 10 ‘members’ elect the governing body of the organization, whether the members serve in the 11 organization, and whether the members finance the organization’s activities (including the 12 costs of litigation). Id. Other circuits have looked at additional factors, including whether 13 ‘membership’ is voluntary, whether there is an articulated and understandable membership 14 structure and whether the lawsuit is within the organization’s central purpose, and thus within 15 the scope of reasons that individuals joined the organization. See Friends of the Earth, Inc., 16 129 F.3d at 829.

17 2) Membership in OSYU as of July 9, 2003

18 On July 9, 2003, OSYU’s only legal vestiges were its initial Articles of Incorporation and 19 its incorporator. OSYU had no legally appointed or elected directors, officers or members, as 20 that term is defined in the California Corporations Code. Moreover, at the time the complaint 21 was filed, OSYU was a Mutual Benefit Corporation, not a Public Benefit Corporation or 22 Nonprofit Religious Corporations, so the ‘member’ definition exceptions in those codes are 23 inapplicable to OSYU. However, because an organization’s lack of legal form is not fatal to 24 the standing inquiry (See Sierra Association for Environment, 744 F.2d at 662), the court 25 applies the Hunt “indicia of membership” test, when evaluating this issue as of July 9, 2003.

26 First, OSYU’s purported ‘members’ did not elect the governing body of the 27 organization. In fact, there was no official governing body of OSYU on July 9. Even assuming 28

1 that Calder, by virtue of her organizational activities, qualifies as a “governing body,” she was 2 not elected to her role by the purported members. This factor weighs against OSYU.

3 Second, as of July 9, OSYU’s purported members did “serve in the organization.” At 4 the beginning stages of a fledgling organization, that organization’s activities will necessarily 5 be limited in scope. Calder, the McCauleys, Barkan, Clark, Hartsell and several other yoga 6 studio owners participated in regular conference calls, discussing OSYU’s initial strategy and 7 activities, including the filing of the current action. Additionally, Calder drafted and distributed 8 OSYU related information to those interested in OSYU. The court finds that OSYU’s purported 9 members did “serve” in and with the organization by fashioning OSYU’s strategy and 10 disseminating its message. This factor weighs in favor of OSYU.

11 Third, OSYU’s purported members did help to finance OSYU prior to July 9, 2003.
12 Sixteen different individuals and organizations donated to OSYU prior to the date this law suit 13 was filed. This factor weighs in favor of OSYU.

14 The additional factors examined by other circuits also tip in favor of OSYU.
15 Membership in OSYU is voluntary, a factor which supports OSYU’s position. However, as of 16 July 9, there was no understandable or articulated membership structure. Membership in 17 OSYU simply seemed to be determined by desire to affiliate with like-minded people. This 18 factor weighs against OSYU. Finally, this lawsuit, which seeks to clarify Choudhury’s yoga-19 related intellectual property rights, is clearly within the organization’s central purpose. This 20 factor weighs in favor of OSYU.

21 The court finds that on balance on July 9, 2003, OSYU did represent its members and 22 did provide the means by which they could express their collective views and protect their 23 collective interests. At least four of the Hunt related factors weigh in favor of OSYU, therefore 24 OSYU passes the “indicia of membership” test to establish associational standing. Moreover, 25 since the filing of this lawsuit, OSYU has established an articulated membership structure.
26 Thus, the court finds that Choudhury’s argument that OSYU currently lacks “indicia of 27 membership,” and is a sham organization to be without merit.

28

1           3)       Standing of Individual Members of OSYU

2           Choudhury argues that OSYU's members would not otherwise have standing to sue in 3 their own right, and that therefore, OSYU has no standing.

4           On July 9, 2003, each of OSYU's purported members had reason to fear an imminent 5 "injury-in-fact" to a concrete and particularized legally protected interest. Based on 6 Choudhury's statements on his website regarding the Morrison settlement, his practice of 7 sending cease and desist letters threatening litigation, and his history of pursuing litigation, 8 each of the yoga practitioners identified in OSYU's opposition brief had real reason to fear 9 that Choudhury might seek to continue his litigation strategy in protecting his copyrights and 10 trademarks. Furthermore, even if a member felt no actual threat that Choudhury would sue, 11 each member had reason to believe their right to practice and teach yoga might be taken 12 away by precedent established by Choudhury's potentially victorious legal actions.

13           The fact that some members of OSYU do not believe they are currently infringing 14 Choudhury's trademark is irrelevant. Although the McCauleys claim that they are not infringing 15 Choudhury's intellectual property rights, this belief alone would not prevent Choudhury from 16 seeking legal action against the McCauleys. The McCauleys belief that they are not engaged 17 in present activities which could constitute copyright or trademark infringement simply has no 18 relevance as to whether they are actually infringing Choudhury's copyrights or trademarks.
19 Finally, the members' injury, namely the inability to teach and perform Bikram yoga or 20 variations thereof without a license from Choudhury, would indeed be redressed by a 21 favorable decision in the current action.

22           4)       Whether this Lawsuit is Germane to OSYU's Purpose

23           In his moving papers, Choudhury argues that OSYU cannot demonstrate that this 24 lawsuit is germane to OSYU's purpose. Choudhury refashions this argument in his reply brief, 25 claiming instead that OSYU's purpose is not analogous enough to other traditional 26 membership associations such that OSYU has standing to bring suit on behalf of its members.

27           Courts have generally found the germaneness test to be undemanding, and the Ninth 28

1 Circuit thus characterizes the germaneness requirement as mandating mere pertinence 2 between litigation subject and organizational purpose. See Presidio Golf Club v. National 3 Park Service, 155 F.3d 1153, 1159 (9th Cir. 1998) (citations omitted).

4 As of the date of this lawsuit, OSYU's stated purpose in its Articles of Incorporation was 5 to "communicate, and defend in any legal way possible, the idea that no form or style of Yoga 6 is proprietary as it can not be owned, transferred, franchised, trademarked or copyrighted." 7 Furthermore, the evidence shows that OSYU was formed to provide a common voice to 8 oppose the "litigious position Choudhury is taking against the Yoga community." This lawsuit 9 is directly related to OSYU's purpose, which is to seek legal clarification of intellectual 10 property rights (Choudhury's copyrights and trademarks in particular) as they relate to yoga.

11 5) Other Arguments

12 In addition to the issue of standing, Choudhury advances various other arguments in 13 support of his motion. Choudhury argues that OSYU members have unclean hands, that a 14 judgment favorable to OSYU would not forestall duplicitous litigation, that the nature of relief 15 sought by OSYU is inequitable, that necessary parties are not before the court pursuant to 16 Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 19, and that the affirmative claim of copyright misuse is not 17 cognizable.

18 a) Whether OSYU Members Have Unclean Hands

19 Choudhury argues that OSYU's members, by virtue of their contracts with Choudhury, 20 have "unclean hands" and would be subject to that defense if they were bringing this suit in 21 their individual capacity. Choudhury asks the court to exercise its discretion to decline to 22 entertain OSYU's action for declaratory relief.

23 The court declines Choudhury's request. The contractual obligations between 24 Choudhury and individuals who happen to be members of OSYU are not material to this 25 copyright and trademark claim for declaratory relief. Resolution of this suit in favor of OSYU 26 would not impact Choudhury's ability to bring common law breach of contract claims against 27 certain individuals.

28

1           b)       Whether Judgment in this Action Would Forestall Duplicitous Litigation
2           Choudhury again asks the court to exercise its discretion to decline to entertain 3 OSYU's action for declaratory relief because this suit will encourage and permit duplicitous 4 litigation.

5           Choudhury's argument is, again, unpersuasive. Choudhury's main argument is that a 6 final ruling in this case will have limited geographic impact. Choudhury's geographical 7 limitation argument presupposes that no court would be an appropriate forum for OSYU to 8 bring its claim, as each court's ruling would be of limited geographical impact. OSYU's legal 9 claims are not limited by geography, but even if they were there is no basis for providing 10 Choudhury with immunity from lawsuits against him which may be filed in other jurisdictions.

11           c)       Whether the Nature of Relief Sought by OSYU is Inequitable 12           Choudhury claims, without relying on any legal authority, that the "asymmetrical nature 13 of relief" available to each party renders this action "unfair." Given Choudhury's aggressive 14 tactics of protecting his copyrights, including cease and desist letters and litigation, 15 Choudhury's claim of inequity is unpersuasive. See Societe de Conditionnement en 16 Aluminium v. Hunter Engineering Co., Inc., 655 F.2d 938, 943 (9th Cir. 1981) (reasoning that 17 "the Declaratory Judgment Act was designed to relieve potential defendants from the 18 Damoclean threat of impending litigation which a harassing adversary might brandish, while 19 initiating suit at his leisure or never. The Act permits parties so situated to forestall the accrual 20 of potential damages by suing for a declaratory judgment, once the adverse positions have 21 crystallized and the conflict of interests is real and immediate.").

22           d)       Whether Necessary Parties are Before the Court Pursuant to Rule 19 23           Choudhury next argues that not all necessary parties are before the court as required 24 by Rule 19. Choudhury claims that Bikram Certified Teachers, who benefit from their licensing 25 arrangement with Choudhury and would be threatened by a ruling favorable to OSYU, have a 26 "financial/contractual" interest in this litigation.

27           Rule 19 protects the legal "interests" of non-parties that will be impaired by the litigation 28

1 “as a practical matter.” Rule 19(a)(2)(i); American Greyhound Racing, Inc. v. Hull, 305 F.3d
2 1015, 1023 (9th Cir. 2002). Where precedent in copyright cases is lacking, it is appropriate 3 to look for guidance in patent law “because of the historic kinship between patent law and 4 copyright law.” Sony Corp. of America v. Universal City Studios, 464 U.S. 417 (1984); Harris
5 v. Emus Records Corp., 734 F.2d 1329, 1333 (9th Cir. 1984). It is well settled in patent law 6 that a non-exclusive licensee “has only a personal and not a property interest in the patent.”
7 See In re CFLC, Inc., 89 F.3d 673, 679 (9th Cir. 1996). Furthermore, the Seventh Circuit has 8 specifically held that for purposes of joinder in a suit for copyright infringement, a licensing 9 agent is neither the legal nor the beneficial owner of the copyright and has no interest in the 10 copyright. Bourne Co. v. Hunter Country Club, Inc., 990 F.2d 934, 937 (7th Cir. 1993).

11 The court finds that Choudhury’s non-exclusive licensees have no legal interest in 12 intellectual property owned by him, and therefore are not necessary parties under Rule 19.

13 e) Whether Copyright Misuse is a Cognizable Claim

14 Choudhury argues in a footnote that the affirmative claim of copyright misuse is not 15 cognizable. The court is not persuaded by Choudhury’s footnote.

16 In accordance with the foregoing, the court finds that Choudhury’s motion for judgment 17 on the pleadings, or in the alternative, for summary judgment or adjudication regarding 18 standing and other jurisdictional issues must be DENIED. All other motions by the parties 19 currently pending before the court, including the remainder of Choudhury’s evidentiary 20 objections, are rendered moot.

21 This order fully adjudicates the matter listed at No. 26 on the clerk’s docket for this 22 case.
