Dear Andy:

In view of the Court's March 29 claim construction order, we do not believe NetJumper can satisfy its burden to prove infringement. I am writing, therefore, to suggest that NetJumper stipulate to noninfringement of the '172 patent in view of that claim construction. In exchange, Google would agree to dismiss its declaratory judgment counterclaims without prejudice. NetJumper would of course also have to formally dismiss the '655 patent, which it has told both the Court and Google on several occasions it does not intend to pursue, and which it has not pursued. This would put the case in condition for appeal, and avoid the necessity of further expensive and unnecessary motion practice in the district court.

Please let us have your response by April 30.

Sincerely,

Frank E Scherkenbach
