v.

Judith E. Levy
United States District Judge

Warden, Dodge Correctional Institution,

Mag. Judge Mona K. Majzoub

Respondent.

OPINION AND ORDER SUMMARILY DISMISSING PETITION FOR WRIT OF HABEAS CORPUS WITHOUT PREJUDICE [1], DENYING CERTIFICATE OF APPEALABILITY, AND
DENYING PERMISSION TO PROCEED ON APPEAL
IN FORMA PAUPERIS

Wisconsin inmate Tyjuan Devon Gray files this petition for writ of habeas corpus under 28 U.S.C. §2254. (Dkt. 1.) Gray does not disclose the basis for his current imprisonment in Wisconsin (id. at 15–16), but it appears that he pleaded guilty to three offenses in the Wayne Circuit Court.¹ (Id. at 1–2.) He indicates that he has not pursued any form of appellate or collateral relief with respect to these convictions. (Id. at 2–13.) Gray does not raise any substantive claims in his petition; he only states that he seeks “to go in front of Judge Walker for my 3 counts of conviction to discuss reinstating probation for the following counts.” (Id. at 14.)

After a petition for writ of habeas corpus is filed, a federal district court undertakes preliminary review to determine whether “it plainly appears from the face of the petition . . . that the petitioner is not entitled to relief in the district court.” Rule 4, Rules Governing § 2254 Cases. If a court determines that the petitioner is not entitled to relief, it must summarily dismiss the petition. Crump v. Lafler, 657 F.3d 393, 398 n.2 (6th Cir. 2011) (citing McFarland v. Scott, 512 U.S. 849, 856 (1994)).

A federal habeas petitioner must exhaust remedies available to him in the state courts before filing his petition. § 2254(b)(1), (c). To exhaust a claim, a petitioner must fairly present the federal claim and then utilize one full round of state appellate review, which includes an appeal to the state appellate and supreme courts. Williams v. Mitchell, 792 F.3d 606, 613 (6th Cir. 2015) (citing cases). The federal district court can raise exhaustion on its own when it is clear that the habeas claims have not been presented to the state courts. See Prather v. Rees, 822 F.2d 1418, 1422 (6th Cir. 1987) (citing cases).

Here, Gray did not exhaust his state court remedies with respect to any potential habeas claims because he never appealed his state court convictions. He appears to have a motion for relief from judgment and other related state remedies available to him under Michigan Court Rules 6.501–509 because he denies that he ever filed for any form of state post-conviction relief. Therefore, the Court must dismiss the petition because Gray has failed to exhaust his state court remedies.

Accordingly, the petition for a writ of habeas corpus (Dkt. 1) is DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE; a certificate of appealability is DENIED because Gray has not made a substantial showing of the denial of a constitutional right, 28 U.S.C. § 2253(c)(2), and permission to appeal in forma pauperis is DENIED because any appeal of this order would be frivolous, 28 U.S.C. § 1915(a)(3).

IT IS SO ORDERED.
