Plaintiff,

v.

T. HUIZING, et al.,

Defendants.

Case No. 1:07-cv-1274

Hon. Robert J. Jonker

REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION

This is a civil rights action brought by a state prisoner pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983.

This matter is now before the court on a motion for summary judgment filed by defendants Mark Gregory and Roger Eastman (docket no. 13).¹

I. Background

Plaintiff's claims arise from an incident that occurred on January 13, 2007, while he was incarcerated at the Ionia maximum security correctional facility. Plaintiff sets forth the following allegations in his complaint. When defendant Huizing picked up plaintiff's meal tray, plaintiff "placed both arms out of the food slot preventing Officer T. Huizing from closing the foodslot door." Compl. at p. 2.² Huizing unlatched the cell door and called for the officer working the panel to open it. The panel officer attempted to open the door two or three times, but it would not open. When the door would not open, Huizing grabbed plaintiff's left hand, started bending and twisting his pinky finger, told plaintiff that he was “going to break your f fingers,” and slammed both of plaintiff’s hands into the food slot. Defendant Gregory heard a commotion and responded. Gregory grabbed plaintiff’s right hand, twisted his pinky finger, slammed his hand against the food slot and told plaintiff, “we are going to break your fingers.” Finally, plaintiff alleges that defendant Eastman knew that there was no reason to open plaintiff’s cell door, but proceeded to open it two or three times upon Huizing’s request. Comp. at pp. 2-3. Plaintiff seeks compensatory damages of $20,000.00 from defendant Huizing, $20,000 from defendant Gregory, $10,000.00 from defendant Eastman, and $50,000.00 for his pain and suffering. Id. at p. 4.

¹ The court notes that defendant Troy Huizing has not yet been served in this action.

² Plaintiff was found guilty of a major misconduct of threatening behavior, based upon holding open the food slot and swinging his arm out of the slot in an attempt to strike Huizing. See Major Misconduct Report (Jan. 30, 2007) attached to Compl.

II. Legal Standard

Plaintiff seeks relief pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983, which confers a private federal right of action against any person who, acting under color of state law, deprives an individual of any right, privilege or immunity secured by the Constitution or federal laws. Burnett v. Grattan, 468 U.S. 42, 45 n. 2 (1984); Stack v. Killian, 96 F.3d 159, 161 (6th Cir.1996). To state a § 1983 claim, a plaintiff must allege two elements: (1) a deprivation of rights secured by the Constitution and laws of the United States, and (2) that the defendant deprived him of this federal right under color of law. Jones v. Duncan, 840 F.2d 359, 360-61 (6th Cir. 1988); 42 U.S.C. § 1983.

Summary judgment is appropriate “if the pleadings, the discovery and disclosure materials on file, and any affidavits show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). In Copeland v. Machulis, 57 F.3d 476 (6th Cir. 1995), the court set forth the standard for deciding a motion for summary judgment:

The moving party bears the initial burden of establishing an absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party’s case. Once the moving party has met its burden of production, the nonmoving party cannot rest on its pleadings, but must present significant probative evidence in support of the complaint to defeat the motion for summary judgment. The mere existence of a scintilla of evidence to support plaintiff's position will be insufficient; there must be evidence on which the jury could reasonably find for the plaintiff.

Copeland, 57 F.3d at 478-79 (citations omitted). “In deciding a motion for summary judgment, the court views the factual evidence and draws all reasonable inferences in favor of the nonmoving party.” McLean v. 988011 Ontario Ltd., 224 F.3d 797, 800 (6th Cir. 2000). However, the court is not bound to blindly adopt a non-moving party’s version of the facts. “When opposing parties tell two different stories, one of which is blatantly contradicted by the record, so that no reasonable jury could believe it, a court should not adopt that version of the facts for purposes of ruling on a motion for summary judgment.” Scott v. Harris, -- U.S. --, 127 S. Ct. 1774, 1776 (2007).

III. Discussion

The Supreme Court has held that “the unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain . . . constitutes cruel and unusual punishment forbidden by the Eighth Amendment.” Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 5 (1992) (quoting Whitley v. Albers, 475 U.S. 312, 319 (1986)); see also Moore v. Holbrook, 2 F.3d 697, 700 (6th Cir. 1993). In analyzing plaintiff's claims, the court must examine whether force was applied in a good-faith effort to maintain or restore discipline, or maliciously and sadistically to cause harm. Hudson, 503 U.S. at 6. Courts evaluate the injury suffered, “the need for application of force, the relationship between that need and the amount of force used, the threat ‘reasonably perceived by the responsible officials,’ and ‘any efforts made to temper the severity of a forceful response.’” Id. at 7, quoting Whitley, 475 U.S. at 321. As the Sixth Circuit summarized in Moore, 2 F.3d at 700, “To determine whether a claim of assault rises to a level of constitutional magnitude, a court must consider the reasons or motivation for the conduct, the type of force used, and the extent of the inflicted injury.”

Courts must give deference to actions prison guards take to maintain prison discipline, as long as those actions are taken pursuant to a considered choice and not in bad faith or for no legitimate purpose. Whitley, 475 U.S. at 321-22. “[Not every] malevolent touch by a prison guard gives rise to a federal cause of action.” Hudson, 503 U.S. at 9. Where the use of some force is required to restore order, it does not violate the Eighth Amendment unless the force used is “repugnant to the conscience of mankind” or the force is used “maliciously and sadistically for the very purpose of causing harm.” Id. at 9,10 (citations omitted). While an Eighth Amendment claim need not include a “significant injury,” a de minimis use of physical force will not support such a claim unless the force used is “of a sort repugnant to the conscience of mankind.” Hudson, 503 U.S. at 9-10. See also, Fillmore v. Page, 358 F.3d 496, 504 (7th Cir. 2004) (“the quantum of force required for a constitutional violation is that which is ‘repugnant to the conscience of mankind’”); Moore, 2 F.3d at 700-01.

A. Defendant Gregory

As an initial matter, plaintiff admits that he had both of his arms outside of the food slot, which prevented defendant Huizing from closing it. Compl. at p.2. In his supporting affidavit, defendant Gregory stated that he responded to a noise coming from plaintiff’s cell, where he observed the cell food slot open and plaintiff’s arm extended out of the slot. Gregory Affidavit, attached to defendants’ brief as Exh. A. at ¶ 5. Gregory spoke to plaintiff, who removed his arm from the food slot. Id. at ¶ 6. Gregory did not state that he was going to break plaintiff’s fingers, nor did he ever bend, twist or slam plaintiff's fingers in the food slot. Id. at ¶ 8. Gregory further explained:

Cell door food slots are to remain closed at all times, unless an officer is delivering a meal tray, or access is needed in order to apply restraints to the prisoner. Prisoners are not permitted to hold the food slot open by sticking their arms or hands out of the slot; to do so is a violation of prison housing rules.

Id. at ¶ 7. Plaintiff has failed to file an affidavit to rebut defendant Gregory's affidavit.

Defendant Gregory's uncontested affidavit establishes that he neither threatened nor injured plaintiff. There is no genuine issue of fact with respect to plaintiff's claim against Gregory. Accordingly, defendant Gregory is entitled to summary judgment.

B. Defendant Eastman

Plaintiff's only claim against defendant Eastman is that he "knew there was no reason for my cell door to be opened . . . but proceeded to open my cell door 2 or 3 times." Compl. at p. 3. Nothing in this allegation suggests that Eastman assaulted plaintiff or acted maliciously or sadistically to inflict pain upon plaintiff. See Hudson, 503 U.S. at 5-6. In his affidavit, Eastman states that he released the back lock on the cell door upon the request of defendant Huizing. Eastman Affidavit at ¶¶ 3-6, attached to defendants' brief as Exh. B. Plaintiff has failed to file an affidavit to rebut defendant Eastman's affidavit.

Defendant Eastman's uncontested affidavit establishes that he neither threatened nor injured plaintiff. There is no genuine issue of fact with respect to plaintiff's claim against Eastman. Accordingly, defendant Eastman is entitled to summary judgment on this claim.

C. De minimis use of force

Finally, even if plaintiff's allegations were true, he was subject to only a de minimis use of force that was insufficient to support this constitutional claim. The medical records reflect that plaintiff was taken to the Ionia County Memorial Hospital (ICMH) emergency room on January 13th for a possible dislocation of his bilateral pinky fingers. MDOC Emergency Room record (1/13/07) attached to Compl. The hospital records indicate that plaintiff's hands were swollen, that he had abrasions on his right and left pinky fingers, that he complained of mild to moderate pain, that he was reportedly unable to flex the pinky fingers of either hand, and that his fingers were "crushed" by being "slammed" in the food slot. Id.; ICMH Medical Records, attached as Exh. C to defendants' brief. However, plaintiff's x-rays were normal and he was told to ice both hands and take Tylenol. Id. The next day, an MDOC nurse examined plaintiff, noting that he had several scratches to the tops of both hands, slight bruising, and no swelling. MDOC Progress Notes (1/14/07) attached to Compl. The nurse also found that plaintiff was able to move his hands within normal limits. Id.

In his response, plaintiff asserts that his pinky fingers are now "permanently facing in an outward position because of the excessive force used." Plaintiff's Response at 6 (emphasis omitted). However, he has failed to present any evidence to support this assertion. On the contrary, none of the medical records suggest that his fingers were contorted or damaged to this extent, and his x-rays were normal. See ICMH Medical records. In this regard, plaintiff's story about his fingers is certainly contradicted by the medical record. See Scott v. Harris, supra.

The record in this case establishes that plaintiff merely suffered some abrasions and bruises on his pinky fingers, that were treated with ice and Tylenol. While the Eighth Amendment does not require a serious injury, plaintiff's minor injuries establish nothing more than a de minimis injury. See Jones Bey v. Johnson, 248 Fed. Appx. 675, 677 (6th Cir. 2007) (pain and swollen wrists resulting from tight handcuffs and striking a food slot are de minimis injuries under the Eighth Amendment); Corsetti v. Tessmer, 41 Fed. Appx. 753, 755-56 (6th Cir. 2002) (small bruises and minor cuts on the shoulder found to be de minimis injuries under the Eighth Amendment). Plaintiff's claims of "injury" arising from his own misbehavior only serve to trivialize the constitution. Accordingly, defendants are entitled to summary judgment on this basis. Id.; Hudson, 503 U.S. at 9-10.

IV. Recommendation

For the reasons set forth above, I respectfully recommend that defendants' motion for summary judgment (docket no. 13) be GRANTED and that defendants Gregory and Eastman be dismissed from this action.
