ORDER OF DISMISSAL FOR LACK OF SUBJECT MATTER JURISDICTION

This action involves Defendant Missouri Department of Social Services’ (“DSS”) role in the placement of M.S., a minor, into protective custody. The parents of M.S., Plaintiffs Erika Tremaine Johnson (“Johnson”) and Blake Sinnott (“Sinnott”) (collectively, “the parents”), allege that DSS discriminated against the family in violation of Title II of the Americans with Disabilities Act (“ADA”), 42 U.S.C. § 12131 et seq.

Now pending before the Court is DSS’s Motion for Summary Judgment (Doc. 44). Because the Rooker-Feldman doctrine divests the Court of subject matter jurisdiction, this case is DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

Background

Johnson and Sinnott are legally blind. On the day M.S. was born, May 21, 2010, DSS received a Newborn Crisis Assessment call reporting that M.S. turned blue while Johnson attempted to breastfeed. Following this call, Tia Wilson (“Wilson”),¹ a DSS employee, met with the parents at the hospital. The parents indicated that they needed some assistance in caring for M.S. Def.'s Ex. A 34 (Doc. 45-1); Ex. D 26 (Doc. 45-4).

Wilson then conducted an investigation into whether the parents could care for M.S. She contacted several of Plaintiffs' family members and at least two community resource centers for the blind to seek assistance for the parents. After her inquiry, Wilson requested that M.S.'s hospital discharge be delayed until May 25, 2010, to give her and the family an opportunity to explore placement options for M.S. She also wrote an eight-page report, which she provided to a state juvenile officer for the Circuit Court of Jackson County, Missouri. Def.'s Ex. E 1 (Doc. 45-5). The report recommended that the state court allow the Children's Division of DSS to retain protective custody of M.S. until safety measures could be put in place at the family home. Id. 9; Pls.' Ex. 5 at 7 (Doc. 48-5).

On May 23, 2010, Johnson was discharged from the hospital, and M.S. remained in the hospital pursuant to Wilson's request. The following day, the state juvenile officer authorized the temporary protective custody transfer of M.S. to DSS. On May 25, 2010, the same juvenile officer requested that the court place M.S. in the custody of the Children's Division of DSS. After a hearing on May 26, 2010, Judge Marco Roldan ("Judge Roldan") ordered that M.S. be placed into DSS's custody. Def.'s Ex. H (Doc. 45-8). M.S. remained in foster care until June 20, 2010, when the juvenile officer voluntarily dismissed the petition and DSS returned M.S. to her parents. Def.'s Ex. I (Doc. 45-9).

Plaintiffs filed the instant action five years later, asserting that DSS discriminated against them by reason of their blindness and M.S.'s association with her blind parents. Am. Compl. ¶¶ 25-37 (Doc. 4). Plaintiffs contend that DSS's investigation, reports, and recommendations leading up to Judge Roldan's order were discriminatory and violated Title II of the ADA.

Standard

Federal courts are courts of limited jurisdiction and possess only the power authorized by the Constitution and statute. Kokkonen v. Guardian Life Ins. Co. of Am., 511 U.S. 375, 377 (1994). “[I]t is to be presumed that a cause lies outside this limited jurisdiction and the burden of establishing the contrary rests upon the party asserting jurisdiction.” Id. (citations omitted).

Plaintiffs here invoke federal question jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1331. But, even where § 1331 appears to create subject matter jurisdiction, the Rooker-Feldman doctrine² may preclude the exercise of federal jurisdiction. This doctrine “provides that, ‘with the exception of habeas corpus petitions, lower federal courts lack subject matter jurisdiction over challenges to state court judgments,’” Ballinger v. Culotta, 322 F.3d 546, 548 (8th Cir. 2003) (quoting Lemons v. St. Louis Cty., 222 F.3d 488, 492 (8th Cir. 2000)), foreclosing “not only straightforward appeals but also more indirect attempts by federal plaintiffs to undermine state court decisions.” Lemons, 222 F.3d at 492.

Specifically, Rooker-Feldman applies to cases: (1) brought by the party that lost in state court; (2) complaining of injuries caused by state court judgments; (3) rendered before the district court proceedings commenced; and (4) inviting district court review and rejection of those judgments. Exxon Mobil Corp. v. Saudi Basic Indus. Corp., 544 U.S. 280, 291-92 (2005).

Discussion

DSS argues that the Rooker-Feldman doctrine prevents this Court from exercising jurisdiction because Plaintiffs’ suit is an impermissible attack on Judge Roldan’s state court order.³ In response, Plaintiffs do not explicitly address DSS's Rooker-Feldman argument except to briefly argue that their injury does not stem from the state court order.

First, Plaintiffs do not contest that the first and third Rooker-Feldman requirements are established. M.S. was placed into DSS's custody pursuant to Judge Roldan's May 26, 2010, order, and against Plaintiffs' wishes. This means Plaintiffs "lost" at the state court level, and the first Rooker-Feldman requirement is satisfied. The third prong is established because Judge Roldan issued his order before Plaintiffs filed this suit.

As for the second requirement, Plaintiffs are complaining of an injury—the removal of M.S. from their custody—that stems directly from Judge Roldan's temporary custody order.⁴ Plaintiffs contest this characterization of their claim, arguing that it was not Judge Roldan's order, but instead DSS's "conduct in all of these child welfare-related activities which discriminated against Plaintiffs . . . and which deprived them from living together for the first two months of M.S.'s life." Pls.' Br. 24. Yet, but for Judge Roldan's order, M.S. would not have been removed from her parents' custody for two months. Thus, it was the state court judgment that actually produced Plaintiffs' alleged injury, and the second requirement is satisfied.

Finally, the fourth element is satisfied because this lawsuit requires the Court to review Judge Roldan's order.

⁴ Rooker-Feldman requires that Plaintiffs complain of injuries caused by state court judgments. Exxon Mobil Corp., 544 U.S. at 291. "A 'judgment' is the final determination of the right of the parties in the action." Mo. Rev. Stat. § 511.020 (emphasis added); see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 54(a). Here, the parties do not address whether Judge Roldan's temporary custody order is a final judgment for purposes of Rooker-Feldman, and the Court will not bear Plaintiffs' burden of establishing federal jurisdiction by raising the issue for them. See Kokkonen, 511 U.S. at 377.

Plaintiffs contend that the evidence relied upon by Judge Roldan in making his determination—DSS’s reports and recommendations—was tainted by illegal discrimination. This is “nothing more than a thinly disguised effort[] to overturn, or at least call into question the validity of” his ruling. Wideman v. Colorado, 242 Fed. App’x 611, 614 (10th Cir. 2007) (finding allegations that the state court “altered [Plaintiff’s] parental rights on the basis of insufficient and/or false evidence” barred by Rooker-Feldman).

Because each of these elements is satisfied, the Rooker-Feldman doctrine divests the Court of jurisdiction in this matter and Plaintiffs’ claims are dismissed for lack of subject matter jurisdiction.

Conclusion

For the reasons set forth above, Plaintiff’s claims are DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE for lack of federal subject matter jurisdiction.

IT IS SO ORDERED.
