

the judge makes the ultimate sentencing determination. 136 S.Ct. at 624. In reaching that holding, the Court relied upon Ring v. Arizona, 536 U.S. 584 (2002), which held that any fact necessary for the imposition of the death penalty must be found by a jury, not a judge. 536 U.S. at 589.

Although a jury imposed the death penalty in Adams' case, he claims that his death sentence is nonetheless unconstitutional under Hurst because the jury was not instructed that it must find beyond a reasonable doubt that there are no mitigating circumstances sufficient to outweigh the aggravating circumstances. Adams reasons that, if the weighing of aggravating and mitigating factors is an element that must be submitted to the jury as required by Hurst, it necessarily follows that the reasonable doubt standard imposed by the Fifth Amendment applies to the weighing process.

10 Adams' arguments notwithstanding, this court is without jurisdiction to rule upon a motion seeking relief from judgment while Adams' case is on appeal to the Ninth Circuit. See Williams v. 11 Woodford, 384 F.3d 567, 586 (9th Cir. 2004) (concluding that district court lacked jurisdiction over 12 13 petitioner's Rule 60(b) motion filed subsequent to notice of appeal). When a case is on appeal, a 14 party may only "ask the district court for an indication that it is willing to entertain a Rule 60(b)15 motion. If the district court gives such an indication, then the party should make a motion in the Court of Appeals for a limited remand to allow the district court to rule on the motion." Sierra 16 Pacific Industries v. Lvng, 866 F.2d 1099, 1113 n. 21 (9th Cir. 1989); see also, Gould v. Mutual Life 17 Insurance Co., 790 F.2d 769, 772 (9th Cir. 1986). 18

This practice has been adopted by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Rule 62.1(a) states,
"If a timely motion is made for relief that the court lacks authority to grant because of an appeal that has been docketed and is pending, the court may: (1) defer considering the motion; (2) deny the motion; or (3) state either that it would grant the motion if the court of appeals remands for that purpose or that the motion raises a substantial issue." Cognizant of this procedure, Adams asks this court to enter a ruling under the third option, which is often referred to as an "indicative ruling." *See*Fed. Ct. App. Manual § 15:12.5 (5th ed.).

26

Rule 60(b) applies to habeas proceedings, but only in conformity with AEDPA,<sup>2</sup> including 2 the limits on successive federal petitions set forth at 28 U.S.C. § 2244(b). Gonzalez v. Crosby, 545 3 U.S. 524, 529 (2005). If a Rule 60(b) motion seeks to add a new ground for relief or attack this court's previous resolution of a claim on the merits, it is, in substance, a successive habeas petition 4 5 subject to the requirements of 28 U.S.C. § 2244(b). Id. at 531. If, however, the motion "attacks, not 6 the substance of the federal court's resolution of a claim on the merits, but some defect in the 7 integrity of the federal habeas proceedings," the motion is not a successive habeas petition. Id. at 8 532.

9 Adams' motion clearly falls in the former category. Accordingly, this court is not permitted 10 to address the merits of Adams' Hurst-based claim until Adams obtains authorization from the court of appeals pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2244(b)(3). 11

12 Adams argues that his motion is not a successive petition because his appeal of this court's 13 final order is still pending. He does not, however, cite to any controlling authority for the 14 proposition that the pendency of his appeal from the denial of his first habeas petition excuses him from obtaining permission from the court of appeals to raise his new claim. While a Second Circuit 15 case arguably supports Adams' position (Whab v. United States, 408 F.3d 116 (2nd Cir. 2005)), 16 opposing cases from other circuits are more persuasive. See Ochoa v. Sirmons, 485 F.3d 538, 541 17 (10th Cir. 2007) (holding that no controlling authority "suggests that whether a Rule 60(b) motion or 18 19 other procedural vehicle may be used to circumvent § 2244(b) depends on the incidental fact that an appeal is or is not pending from the underlying habeas proceeding") and Phillips v. United States, 20 668 F.3d 433, 435 (7th Cir. 2012) ("Nothing in the language of § 2244 or § 2255 suggests that 21 22 time-and-number limits are irrelevant as long as a prisoner keeps his initial request alive through 23 motions, appeals, and petitions.").

Adams also argues that, even if § 2244 does apply, he is still entitled to relief because §

2244(b)(2)(A) permits him to pursue a claim that "relies on a new rule of constitutional law made retroactive to cases on collateral review by the Supreme Court that was previously unavailable."
 That provisions does not, however, provide a basis for this court to issue an indicative ruling in Adams' favor. Setting aside the absence of a decision from the Supreme Court making Hurst retroactive,<sup>3</sup> the determination under § 2244(b)(2)(A) is to be made by the court of appeals, not this court. See 28 U.S.C. § 2244(b)(3).

Based on the foregoing, this court must deny Adams' motion for relief under Rule 60(b). In the event Adams chooses to appeal this decision, this court denies a certificate of appealability (COA).

Pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2253(c)(2), a COA may issue only when the petitioner "has made a substantial showing of the denial of a constitutional right." With respect to claims rejected on the merits, a petitioner "must demonstrate that reasonable jurists would find the district court's assessment of the constitutional claims debatable or wrong." Slack v. McDaniel, 529 U.S. 473, 484 (2000) (citing Barefoot v. Estelle, 463 U.S. 880, 893 & n.4 (1983)). For procedural rulings, a COA will issue only if reasonable jurists could debate (1) whether the petition states a valid claim of the denial of a constitutional right and (2) whether the court's procedural ruling was correct. Id.

The issue of whether Adams' Rule 60(b) motion should be treated as a successive petition under Gonzalez v. Crosby is not debatable among reasonable jurists and, therefore, does not warrant the issuance of a COA.

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that petitioner's motion for relief from judgment pursuant to Rule 60(b) (ECF No. 285) is DENIED.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that a certificate of appealability is DENIED with respect to this decision.
