In general, "compelling reasons" sufficient to outweigh the public's interest in disclosure and justify sealing court records exist when such "court files might have become a vehicle for improper purposes," such as the use of records to gratify private spite, promote public scandal, circulate libelous statements, or release trade secrets. ... The mere fact that the production of records may lead to a litigant's embarrassment, incrimination, or exposure to further litigation will not, without more, compel the court to seal its records.

Kamakana v. City and County of Honolulu, 447 F.3d 1172, 1178-79 (9th Cir. 2006)(citations omitted).

To justify the sealing of discovery materials attached to non-dispositive motions, a particularized showing of good cause is required. Id. at 1180. To justify the sealing of discovery materials attached to dispositive motions, however, a higher threshold is required: a particularized showing that compelling reasons support secrecy. Id. "A 'good cause' showing will not, without more, satisfy a 'compelling reasons' test." Id. When private discovery materials are attached to a dispositive motion (or response or reply), such materials become a part of a judicial record, and as such "are public documents almost be definition, and the public is entitled to access by default." Id.

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the proposed protective order is disapproved without prejudice to submit an amended order consistent with the requirements of Kamakana v. City and County of Honolulu.

DATED this 22nd day of June, 2011.
