30 Dime college baskeXball release on TENNESSEE minus the points against Memphis. The Volunteers are a 6½-point favorite both here in Vegas and offshYore. This pointspread has already climbed from an opening number of 5½, so it woZld be wise to jump on this game ASAP before the number ticks up to 7.

TENNESSEE

How do you lay points with a Tennessee team that started out 7-0 but has since dropped four of its last six (going 0-5 ATS in lined games), including outright losses to Oakland (giving up 89 points at home), Charlotte (road) and Charleston (giving up 91 points at home), all as a double-digit favorite? EspeXially when the Vols are facing an instate rival that's 11-2 and ranked 21st in this week's poll?

Well, let me answer that question with a question: Knowing all this, why did Vegas install the Vols as such a hefty home favorite tonight? Because they're the superior team, that's why.

Make no mistake, there's no excuse for Tennessee's recent slump – the Vols are way too talented to be losing to Charlotte, Oakland, Charleston and USC (with three of those losses coming on their home court). But I'm betting that coach Bruce Pearl (more on him shortly) will have his troops prepared for this one, because even though his old nemesis (John Calipari) is no longer at Memphis, he always puts a ton of emphasis on this annual game against the Tigers (particularly when it's played in Knoxville).

Speaking of Memphis, I'm calling fraud on its 11-2 record. The Tigers have faced just four "name" teams this season, and they beat the lesser of those two squads (four-point home win over Miami, Fla.; nine-point neutral-site win over LSU) but got clobbered by Kansas (81-68 at Madison Square Garden) and Georgetown (86-69 at home). Memphis failed to cover in all four of those contests and is just 1-8 ATS in its last nine lined games.

Back to Pearl. This is his last game on the Tennessee bench before he begins serving an eight-game suspYension for NCAA rules violations (after tonight, Pearl will sit out the first half of the SEC schedule, and with the exception of a non-conference road contest at UConn on Jan. 22, he won't be coaching in a game until Feb. 8 at Kentucky). Thus this game (with it being in Knoxville) becomes even more important to Tennessee.

The Vols won at Memphis 66-59 as a 2½-point underdog last year; they've taken three of the last four in this rivalry; and they're 5-1 ATS in the last six series clashes. And while Tennessee has covered in five of its last six against Conference USA foes, Memphis is in ATS slumps of 9-26 overall, 7-19 in non-league games, 1-7 versus the SEC and 0-8 against oppZnents with a winning record.

In the end, I smell a trap line (the public will load up on Memphis because of what's happened to Tennessee over the last three weeks), and the Vols will rise up and post a double-digit win for their embattled coach.

"Iron" Joel Tyson for SatXrday, 30 Dime Stone Cold Lock is an Absolute BlowYout winner on Ohio State to step it against South Carolina. I also have a 10 Dime OpenZng Bowl Lock on Fresno State right around a 1-point dog versus Northern Illinois in the Humanitarian Bowl.

Nice early returns for the Gamecocks who are off to a 7-1 start. Their lone loss came against Michigan State of the Big 10, and the Cocks did manXge to cover in that game, losing by 11 as the 17 point underdog.

Here we have a similar line against another Big 10 foe, but I will tell you flat out that Ohio State presents a diffYerent set of challenges for the very young visitors from Columbia.

Ohio State has the emerging freshman Jared Sullinger to keep the Gamecocks front line busy, and at 9-0 the Buckeyes sure look like the "real deal" to me.

Today I think they make a statement against South Carolina who will be playing their first road game of the month.

Lay it with the Buckeyes.

Northern Illinois loses the MAC Championship Game outright as an 18 point favorite, their coach Jerry Kill leaves with both of his coordinators for the University of Minnesota, and the Huskies are still a slight favorite in this bowl game?

OK, I will bite. Give me Fresno State in this one, as the Bulldogs may have 4 losses, but they have played the stronger competition, and 3 of the schools they lost to are playing in bowl games this holiday season.

Fresno State was blanked 51-0 on this field about a month ago, but that was against Boise State. They are not playing Boise State in this one, and they are quite familiar with the blue turf in Idaho, as Coach Pat Hill has already won his 2 previous tries in this bowl game the last 2 times the Bulldogs have traveled to Boise, Idaho.

Northern Illinois has been run over the last 2 years in their bowl games, and are 0-3 the last 4 years when appearing in a bowl, getting outscored 81-20.

10 dime bonus baby on Fresno State.

My 25 Dime winner is on the UTEP Miners as an underdog against Brigham Young at 2 p.m. Eastern. As of 11:59 p.m. Pacific, the line I am currently seeing both here in Las Vegas and at the offshore books is a solid +11.5. I also like Fresno State at +1.5 for 15 Dimes, in its 5:30 p.m. kickoff against Northern Illinois.

TODAY'S ANALYSIS

BYU playing in the New Mexico Bowl isn't exactly exciting for Cougar fans. They are more interested in how their basketball team fares Saturday afternoon against UCLA than in this minor bowl matchup.

This isn't the case, though, with Texas El-Paso. The Miners are close to Albuquerque, site of the bowl, and excited to participate in their first post-season game in five years.

Motivation is a great equalizer in bowl games. Bad teams actually try harder because they have something to prove and are happy to be playing. One of the strongest bowl trends is underdogs of seven or more points covering. That trend is cashing at a 64 percent rate since 2000.

BYU has a freshman quarterback, Jake Heaps. He's going to be very good, but right now he's learning. UTEP is led by senior Trevor Vittatoe, who holds the school record for passing yards and touchdowns.

Vittatoe, a four-year starter, has been hampered by a sprained ankle. The Miners last played a month ago. Vittatoe isn't quite 100 percent according to sources, but his ankle is better. The extra time has allowed the Miners' banged-up offensive line to get healthy.

BYU didn't finish its regular season until a week later when it lost by one point to Utah on a blocked field goal at the end. The Cougars are unfamiliar with this venue having played in the Las Vegas Bowl during the past five years. UTEP beat New Mexico, 38-20, at this site earlier this season.

The Cougars are just 2-5 ATS in non-conference. They don't have the motivation or overall talent this season to be laying this high of a number.

Fresno State - Northern Illinois is not happy to be in this very minor bowl game. The Huskies had grander visions.

But all that came crashing down when they were stunned by Ohio in the MAC title game losing 26-21 as 17 1/2-point favorites.

That loss occurred just 15 days ago and wrecked Northern Illinois' great season, which had featured nine consecutive victories. The double whammy of getting past that defeat in such a short turnaround and losing their coach, Jerry Kill to Minnesota, is too much for the Huskies.

Fresno State is well coached under Pat Hill. The Bulldogs will be prepared and focused. They have a shorter distance to travel and are familiar with Bronco Stadium having played there against Boise State. This also is the third time in seven years the Bulldogs are playing in this bowl game.

The Bulldogs are 6-1 ATS as a bowl 'dog. They have won and covered the past four times they've been a bowl 'dog.

I like Hill with extra time to prepare against a Northern Illinois coaching staff that is in flux. Wisconsin assistant Dave Doeren has been named Northern Illinois new head coach, but assistant Tom Matukewicz will handle the team in this matchup.

In non-conference action, Hill and Fresno State are 11-1 ATS when taking points.

EXHIBIT 54

The Clippers are now playing their 3rd road game in 4 nights and we all know how bad they have been on the road this year.

Da Bulls get Da Win and cover.
