UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT DISTRICT OF NEVADA

FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE
CORPORATION, AS RECEIVER OF SILVER
STATE BANK,

Plaintiff,

v.

COREY L. JOHNSON, et al.,

Defendants,

Case No. 2:12-CV-00209-KJD-PAL

ORDER

Before the Court is the Motion for Partial Summary Judgment (#153) of Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, as Receiver of Silver State Bank, (“FDIC-R”). Defendant Douglas E. French (“French”) filed a response in opposition (#173), to which Defendant Gary A. Gardner (“Gardner”) joined (#177). Gardner filed a response in opposition (#176), to which French and Defendant Corey L. Johnson (“Johnson”) (#188, #192) joined. Johnson filed a response in opposition (#180), to which French and Gardner (#189, #190) joined. The FDIC-R filed a reply (#205).

The FDIC-R raises four issues in its motion for partial summary judgment (#153). One issue is whether the FDIC-R has standing to recover losses to the Deposit Insurance Fund. This issue was addressed by a previous court order (#215) granting Defendants’ motion for partial summary judgment. Two additional issues are whether the FDIC-R’s claims are barred under the Extender Statute and whether the economy is an intervening or superseding cause. The Court will not address these two issues in this order; they will be addressed in future orders. The issue

1 the Court will address in this order is what affirmative defenses, if any, Defendants may assert 2 against the FDIC-R. Thus, the FDIC-R's supplemental authority (#211, #212) are irrelevant to 3 the instant order.

4 I. Background

5 Silver State Bank ("SSB") was a financial institution with offices in several states (#121).
6 In 2008, SSB was closed and the FDIC-R was appointed receiver (#121). Afterwards, the 7 FDIC-R filed a Complaint (#1) and an Amended Complaint (#121). The Amended Complaint
8 alleges that Defendants, as SSB's former officers, are personally liable for the damages caused 9 by their gross negligence and breach of fiduciary duties (#121). Johnson (#148), French (#125), 10 and Gardner (#126) (collectively, "Defendants") answered the FDIC-R's Amended Complaint 11 and asserted various affirmative defenses.

12 The FDIC-R filed its Motion for Partial Summary Judgment (#153) seeking judgment as 13 to Johnson's seventh, eighth, ninth, thirteenth, sixteenth, and eighteenth affirmative defenses; 14 French's seventh, eighth, and tenth affirmative defenses; and Gardner's second, thirteenth, 15 seventeenth, eighteenth, and nineteenth affirmative defenses.

16 II. Legal Standards

17 A. Summary Judgment

18 The purpose of summary judgment is to "pierce the pleadings and to assess the proof in 19 order to see whether there is a genuine need for trial." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith 20 Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587 (1986). Summary judgment may be granted if the pleadings, 21 depositions, affidavits, and other materials of the record show that there is no genuine issue of 22 material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. See FED. R.
23 CIV. P. 56(c); see also Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322 (1986).

24 A fact is material if it might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law.
25 Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248 (1986). Uncorroborated and self-serving 26 testimony, without more, will not create a genuine issue of material fact. See Villiarimo v. Aloha

1 Island Air Inc., 281 F.3d 1054, 1061 (9th Cir. 2002). Conclusory or speculative testimony is also 2 insufficient to raise a genuine issue of fact. Anheuser Busch, Inc. v. Natural Beverage Distribs., 3 69 F.3d 337, 345 (9th Cir. 1995).

4 The moving party bears the initial burden of showing the absence of a genuine issue of 5 material fact. See Celotex, 477 U.S. at 323. Once that burden is met, the nonmoving party then 6 has the burden of setting forth specific facts demonstrating that a genuine issue exists. See 7 Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 587; FED. R. CIV. P. 56(e). If the nonmoving party fails to make a 8 sufficient showing of an essential element for which it bears the burden of proof, the moving 9 party is entitled to summary judgment. See Celotex, 477 U.S. at 322-23.

10 B. Affirmative Defenses and the FDIC

11 The FDIC was created to promote stability and confidence in the nation's banking 12 system. Bullion Services, Inc. v. Valley State Bank, 50 F.3d 705, 708 (9th Cir. 1995). To achieve 13 these goals, Congress created the FDIC-Corporate ("FDIC-C") and the FDIC-R. Id. Courts have 14 been careful to keep the responsibilities, rights, and liabilities of these two entities legally 15 separate. Id. at 709. The FDIC-C's primary responsibilities are to insure bank deposits and 16 administer the Deposit Insurance Fund ("DIF"). Id. at 708. The DIF is a pool of assets used to 17 guarantee the safety of federally insured deposits. Id. The FDIC-R's primary responsibility, on 18 the other hand, is to act as a receiver for an insolvent financial institution. Id.

19 Initially, many courts determined that the FDIC-R's rights and defenses were governed 20 by federal law. See e.g. Fed. Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Mmahat, 907 F.2d 546, 550 (5th Cir. 1990)
21 (holding that federal law governs the rights of the FDIC); FDIC v. Gulf Life Ins. Co., 737 F.2d 22 1513, 1517 (11th Cir.1984) (holding that federal rule governs the defenses against the FDIC).
23 This led to the judicial creation of federal rules. See Gulf Life, 737 F.2d at 1517-20 (adopting a 24 federal rule that defeats certain affirmative defenses). However, the U.S. Supreme Court later 25 held that (1) state law, rather than federal law, governs the elements of the FDIC-R's cause of 26 action; (2) "any defense good against the original party is good against the receiver"; and (3) the

1 judicial creation of a special federal rule is not justified absent a significant conflict between 2 federal policy and the use of state law. O'Melveny & Myers v. F.D.I.C., 512 U.S. 79, 83-87 3 (1994).

4 On its face, O'Melveny's broad language suggests that a defendant may raise any 5 affirmative defense against the FDIC-R that it could have raised had the failed financial 6 institution been the party pursuing litigation. However, O'Melveny does not detail how effective 7 certain affirmative defenses may be against the FDIC-R. Many courts recognize this and have 8 drawn different conclusions as to how O'Melveny impacts a defendant's affirmative defenses.
9 See, e.g., Grant Thornton, LLP v. F.D.I.C., 535 F. Supp. 2d 676, 724 (S.D.W. Va. 2007) (stating 10 that O'Melveny did not address the issue of pre-receivership conduct by regulators); Resolution 11 Trust Corp. v. Heiserman, No. CIV. A. 93-B-944, 1994 WL 907409 (D. Colo. 1994) (stating that 12 the sole affirmative defense addressed in O'Melveny was the defense of imputed knowledge).

13 A substantial number of courts have barred defendants from asserting certain affirmative 14 defenses. See Grant, 535 F. Supp. 2d at 722. These courts are reluctant to allow a defendant to 15 assert affirmative defenses that rely on the discretionary actions of the FDIC or the pre-16 receivership actions of regulators. See, e.g., F.D.I.C. v. Oldenburg, 38 F.3d 1119, 1122 (10th Cir.
17 1994) (holding that former officers of a financial institution may not assert affirmative defenses 18 of contributory negligence and mitigation of damages against the FDIC-R); Grant, 535 F. Supp.
19 2d at 722 (holding that regulators' failure to do anything in their regulatory capacity cannot 20 defeat the FDIC's claim). The reasoning of these courts, however, is quite varied. See, e.g., 21 F.D.I.C. v. Collins, 920 F. Supp. 30, 35 (D. Conn. 1996) (stating that courts should focus on the 22 alleged wrongdoers' actions, not the actions taken by the FDIC or other regulatory agencies); 23 Fed. Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Ornstein, 73 F. Supp. 2d 277, 281 (E.D.N.Y. 1999) (stating that the 24 FDIC must be able to perform its duties without fear of judicial second-guessing); FDIC v.
25 Raffa, 935 F.Supp. 119, 124 (D.Conn.1995) (stating that the FDIC owes no duty to the former 26 officers of a financial institution).

1 Although these courts give different explanations for why certain affirmative defenses are 2 barred against the FDIC, their central underlying concern is best articulated by a Maryland 3 district court:

4 [N]othing could be more paradoxical or contrary to sound policy than to hold that 5 it is the public which must bear the risk of errors of judgment made by its officials 6 in attempting to save a failing institution—a risk which would never have been 7 created but for defendants’ wrongdoing in the first instance.

8 Fed. Sav. and Loan Ins. Corp. v. Roy, 1988 WL 96570 (D. Md. 1988). The Roy court has been 9 quoted many times,¹ even after O’Melveny,² to provide a foundation for barring affirmative 10 defenses that rely on the FDIC’s conduct.

11 Despite these concerns, there are other courts that have allowed a defendant to assert 12 affirmative defenses against the FDIC-R. These courts believe that O’Melveny did away with the 13 judicially created federal rules that modified FIRREA. See, e.g., Resolution Trust Corp. v.
14 Liebert, 871 F. Supp. 370, 373 (C.D. Cal. 1994) (holding that O’Melveny did away with the 15 federal “no-duty” rule that barred a defendant’s affirmative defenses); FDIC v. Gladstone, 44 16 F.Supp.2d 81, 86-87 (D. Mass.1999) (holding that O’Melveny generally did away with the 17 federal common law rule barring a defendant’s affirmative defenses). These courts also believe – 18 in harmony with O’Melveny – that judicially creating a federal rule is highly disfavored, and will 19 only be acceptable if there is a significant conflict between federal policy and the use of state 20 law. See e.g. Gladstone, 44 F.Supp.2d at 87 (stating that the court will only find a conflict 21 between federal policy and the use of state law if it is clearly significant). Consequently, these 22 courts often allow a defendant to assert an affirmative defense against the FDIC, unless the 23 affirmative defense is barred under state law. See e.g. Resolution Trust Corp. v. Massachusetts 24 Mut. Life Ins. Co., 93 F. Supp. 2d 300, 307-9, 310 (W.D.N.Y. 2000) (allowing a defendant to

¹ See, e.g., F.D.I.C. v. Bierman, 2 F.3d 1424, 1438 (7th Cir. 1993); Fed. Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Baker, 739 F.
Supp. 1401, 1407 (C.D. Cal. 1990).

² See, e.g., F.D.I.C. v. Oldenburg, 38 F.3d at 1121; Raffa, 935 F. Supp. at 124; Ornstein, 73 F. Supp. 2d at 282.

1 assert failure to mitigate and contributory negligence affirmative defenses); Gladstone, 44 F.
2 Supp. 2d at 90 (holding that a defendant could not assert the affirmative defense of laches 3 because it was barred under state law).

4 Thus, there is a clear division among the courts as to whether a defendant can assert 5 certain affirmative defenses against the FDIC-R. Before O'Melveny, a clear majority of courts 6 held that a defendant could not assert several affirmative defenses against the FDIC-R. See 7 Resolution Trust Corp. v. Liebert, 871 F. Supp. 370, 372-73 (C.D. Cal. 1994) (stating that a 8 heavy majority of courts hold that the 'no duty' rule prevents defendants from asserting certain 9 affirmative defenses against the FDIC). However, this Court cannot find a clear majority after 10 O'Melveny. With this understanding of the issue, the Court turns to the FDIC-R's arguments.

11 III. Analysis

12 The FDIC-R's motion for partial summary judgment is insufficient because it fails to 13 state with particularity the FDIC-R's grounds for seeking summary judgment. See FED. R. CIV.
14 P. 7(b)(1)(B). Instead of showing the Court why, as a matter of law, each of Defendants' fourteen 15 affirmative defenses should be barred, the FDIC-R groups Defendants' affirmative defenses into 16 an ambiguous mass and asserts that it is entitled to summary judgment. Furthermore, the FDIC-17 R's arguments are vague, unorganized, and circumambulatory. The Court would be justified in 18 denying the FDIC-R's motion under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 7(b). However, in the 19 interest of judicial efficiency, the Court will address the substantive issue raised in the FDIC-R's 20 motion.

21 The issue before the Court is whether Defendants' affirmative defenses must fail. The 22 FDIC-R argues that Defendants cannot assert certain affirmative defenses because (1) the FDIC
23 operates in two legally distinct capacities, (2) bank examiners and regulators owe Defendants no 24 duty, and (3) the Federal Tort Claims Act ("FTCA") bars affirmative defenses that are based on 25 the FDIC's discretionary actions.

26 ///

1 A. The FDIC is a Distinct Legal Entity

2 The FDIC-R’s first argument is that Defendants’ affirmative defenses are barred because 3 they fail to distinguish the FDIC’s different legal capacities. However, the FDIC-R’s argument
4 fails because it does not show how this principle of legal distinction bars Defendants’ affirmative 5 defenses under Nevada law. Furthermore, Nevada law suggests that a defendant can assert an 6 affirmative defense that relies on the actions of a party that is legally distinct from the plaintiff.

7 In its argument, the FDIC-R states that it is a distinct legal entity from its counterpart, the 8 FDIC-C, and performs different functions, protects different interests, and pursues different legal 9 strategies. The FDIC-R clarifies that it cannot be held responsible for the FDIC-C’s actions. The 10 FDIC-R then argues that Defendants’ affirmative defenses must fail because they seek to shift 11 the blame for SSB’s losses onto the FDIC-C and other bank regulators.

12 Nevada law governs whether Defendants’ affirmative defenses are barred. See 13 O’Melveny, 512 U.S. at 86. The FDIC-R has not provided (and the Court has not found) any 14 Nevada law that shields a plaintiff from a defendant’s affirmative defenses on this principle of 15 legal distinction. In the absence of controlling authority, this Court must predict how the 16 Supreme Court of Nevada would resolve this issue. Dimidowich v. Bell & Howell, 803 F.2d 17 1473, 1482 (9th Cir.1986).

18 Under Nevada law, an affirmative defense consists of new facts and arguments that, if 19 true, will defeat a plaintiff’s claim, even if all allegations in the complaint are true. Schettler v.
20 RalRon Capital Corp., 275 P.3d 933, 940 (Nev. 2012). Nevada law allows a defendant to raise an 21 affirmative defense that relies on the actions of a party that is legally distinct from a plaintiff.
22 See, e.g., Banks ex rel. Banks v. Sunrise Hosp., 102 P.3d 52, 67 (Nev. 2004) (holding that 23 Nevada’s tortfeasor contribution and comparative negligence statutes did not prohibit a 24 defendant from attempting to establish that the responsibility for a plaintiff’s injuries rests with 25 nonparties). Not all affirmative defenses are “true” affirmative defenses. See Clark County Sch.
26 Dist. v. Richardson Const., Inc., 168 P.3d 87, 96-97 (Nev. 2007) (holding that, in a tort action, a

1 defense asserting third-party culpability was not a true affirmative defense because it merely 2 sought to negate an essential element of the plaintiff's claims). However, even if a defense is not 3 a true affirmative defense, a defendant may still assert it to negate an essential element of a 4 plaintiff's claim. See Id.

5 In the present case, FDIC-R's first argument reasons that, because the FDIC-R did not 6 perform the actions alleged by several of Defendants' affirmative defenses, they should be 7 dismissed. This is not supported by Nevada law. Nevada law allows Defendants to attempt to 8 establish that the fault for the FDIC-R's injury lies with nonparties to the present case. See, 9 Banks, 102 P.3d at 67. Several of Defendants' affirmative defenses, such as Defendants' 10 intervening and superseding cause defenses, seek to establish that the FDIC-R's damages were 11 caused by parties other than Defendants. The Court cannot, therefore, grant the FDIC-R's motion 12 simply because Defendants' have alleged affirmative defenses that rely on the actions of a third 13 party.

14 Furthermore, Nevada law allows a defendant to assert a defense that negates an essential 15 element of a plaintiff's claim. See Clark County, 168 P.3d at 96-97. In the present case, the 16 FDIC-R brought a cause of action for gross negligence against Defendants (#121). Thus, to 17 succeed in that cause of action, the FDIC-R must satisfy Nevada's requirements for gross 18 negligence. See 12 U.S.C. 1821(k). The Supreme Court of Nevada defines gross negligence as 19 follows:

20 Gross negligence is equivalent to the failure to exercise even a slight degree of 21 care. It is materially more want of care than constitutes simple inadvertence. It is 22 an act or omission respecting legal duty of an aggravated character as 23 distinguished from a mere failure to exercise ordinary care. It is very great 24 negligence, or the absence of slight diligence, or the want of even scant care. It amounts to indifference to present legal duty, and to utter forgetfulness of legal obligations so far as other persons may be affected.

25 Bearden v. City of Boulder City, 507 P.2d 1034, 1035-36 (Nev. 1973). Defendants raised several 26 affirmative defenses in response to the FDIC-R's gross negligence claim, including reasonable

1 reliance, waiver, and comparative negligence. These defenses arguably seek to negate essential 2 elements of the FDIC-R's claims by showing that Defendants did, in fact, exercise at least some 3 care. This is permitted under Nevada law. See Clark County, 168 P.3d at 96-97. The Court, 4 therefore, rejects the FDIC-R's first argument.

5 B. Bank Regulators' Duty to Defendants

6 The FDIC-R's second argument is that Defendants' affirmative defenses are barred under 7 the "no-duty" rule. The FDIC-R's argument fails because Nevada has not adopted the "no-duty"
8 rule. Furthermore, the "no-duty" rule is a judicially created federal rule, which is generally 9 prohibited under O'Melveny.

10 The FDIC-R's argument makes three assertions: (1) the Supreme Court of Nevada
11 adopted the "no-duty" rule, (2) the federal "no-duty" rule survived O'Melveny, and (3) 12 "O'Melveny has no application when the conduct at issue is that of a federal actor such as the 13 FDIC-R" (#153, p. 23).

14 The "no-duty" rule, as adopted by federal courts, is a judicially created federal rule that 15 bars affirmative defenses that rely on the FDIC's actions. See Bierman, 2 F.3d at 1438. The 16 policy behind the "no-duty" rule is that the former officers of a failed financial institution should 17 be responsible for the FDIC-R's mistakes when it steps into the shoes of a failed financial 18 institution. See Id. As previously mentioned, the legal issue of whether the "no-duty" rule 19 survived O'Melveny is complex and disputed. F.D.I.C. v. Spangler, 10-CV-4288, 2012 WL
20 5558941 (N.D. Ill. 2012). The courts who believe the "no-duty" rule survived O'Melveny 21 typically hold that O'Melveny is limited to defenses arising from the pre-receivership conduct of 22 private individuals. Liebert, 871 F. Supp. at 373. The remaining courts feel that the "no-duty" 23 rule is clearly a judicially created federal rule, which O'Melveny abolished. Id.

24 In its first assertion, the FDIC-R contends that the Supreme Court of Nevada adopted the 25 "no-duty" rule. The FDIC-R's assertion relies on Scott v. Dept. of Com., a Supreme Court of 26 Nevada case. The FDIC-R's assertion, however, is incorrect. The Supreme Court of Nevada did

1 not adopt the “no-duty” rule in Scott. Instead, it held that: “when a governmental duty runs to the 2 public, no private cause of action is created by breach of such duty.” Scott v. Dept. of Com., 763
3 P.2d 341, 344 (Nev. 1988). This holding does not adopt the “no-duty” rule; it merely prevents a 4 party from suing the government when it has a duty to the public. See Id. Furthermore, the 5 Supreme Court of Nevada did not address the “no-duty” rule, or even the issue of affirmative 6 defenses in Scott. See Id. The FDIC-R’s argument, therefore, has no merit.

7 Additionally, a court does not automatically adopt the federal “no-duty” rule whenever it 8 holds that a party does not have a legal duty towards another party. Compare Bierman, 2 F.3d at 9 1438-40 (explaining that the “no-duty” rule is a federal rule where courts, as a matter of public 10 policy, bar affirmative defenses, such as negligence and failure to mitigate) with Scott, 763 P.2d 11 at 344 (explaining a plaintiff could not bring a cause of action against the state because state 12 regulators owe no duty to protect individual investors). When a court holds that a defendant does 13 not have a duty towards a plaintiff, that holding typically bars the plaintiff from bringing a claim 14 against the defendant for that specific issue; it does not affect the defendant’s affirmative 15 defenses. See, e.g., Scott, 763 P.2d at 342-44. In contrast, the federal “no-duty” rule does not 16 apply to claims. See Bierman, 2 F.3d at 1438-40. Instead, it nullifies a defendant’s affirmative 17 defenses against the FDIC-R. Id. Thus, if the Supreme Court of Nevada wished to adopt the 18 federal “no-duty” rule in Scott, it would need to do more than merely hold that one party owes 19 no duty to another. The Supreme Court of Nevada did not do so in Scott. See Scott, 763 P.2d at 20 342-45.

21 Furthermore, if the Court were to accept the FDIC-R’s argument, it would lead to absurd 22 results. For example, under the FDIC-R’s reasoning, if a prison official decided to sue an inmate, 23 the inmate would be unable to assert several affirmative defenses simply because the prison 24 official does not owe the former inmate a duty. See Butler ex rel. Biller v. Bayer, 168 P.3d 1055, 25 1067 (Nev. 2007) (holding that a prison official does not have a duty to warn an inmate of an 26 unforeseen intentional attack). This would inappropriately cause many defendants to lose on the

1 merits of claims brought against them. The Court, therefore, rejects the FDIC-R’s assertion that 2 Scott adopted the federal “no-duty” rule.³

3 Turning to the second assertion, the FDIC-R argues that the federal “no-duty” rule 4 survived O’Melveny. The FDIC-R’s argument relies primarily on the holdings of several district 5 courts outside of this circuit. E.g., Raffa, 935 F.Supp. at 124 (holding the FDIC owes no duty to 6 bank’s officers and directors).

7 Federal courts adopted the “no-duty” rule to address their concerns that certain 8 affirmative defenses inappropriately shifted to the public the cost of the FDIC’s mistakes. See 9 Bierman, 2 F.3d at 1438-40. The Supreme Court, however, held that the judicial creation of 10 federal common-law rules altered FIRREA, and were generally not justified. O’Melveny, 512
11 U.S. at 87. It clarified that judicial creation of these exceptions was only appropriate if there 12 exists a significant conflict between federal policy and the use of state law. Id. Generic federal 13 interests, such as the interest of uniformity, are insufficient to meet this standard. Id. at 88.

14 It is clear to the Court that the “no-duty” rule is a federal common-law rule that alters 15 FIRREA. Thus, its judicial creation is generally not justified. Id. at 87. Additionally, the FDIC-16 R has failed to identify (and the Court has not found) a significant conflict that would justify the 17 judicial creation of the “no-duty” rule. Therefore, the Court rejects the FDIC-R’s second 18 assertion.

19 In its third assertion, the FDIC-R argues: “O’Melveny has no application when the 20 conduct at issue is that of a federal actor such as the FDIC-R” (#153, p. 23). However, the FDIC-21 R’s argument does not have merit.

22 The FDIC-R’s argument is a conclusory statement, insufficiently supported by law or 23 fact. Specifically, it contradicts O’Melveny. The U.S. Supreme Court held that O’Melveny

24 ³ The FDIC-R also argues the Ninth Circuit Court adopted the “no-duty” rule in Harmsen v. Smith. This 25 argument is flawed for the exact same reason. In Harmsen, the Ninth Circuit Court held that the Comptroller owed 26 no duty to the bank or its shareholders. Harmsen v. Smith, 586 F.2d 156, 157 (9th Cir. 1978). However, the Ninth Circuit Court only held that this barred the directors from bringing a claim for relief against Comptroller. See Id.
156-58. It did not address whether this principle barred a defendant’s affirmative defenses. Id.

1 governs the FDIC-R's rights and liabilities: "The rules of decision at issue here do not govern the 2 primary conduct of the United States or any of its agents or contractors, but affect only the 3 FDIC's rights and liabilities, as receiver, with respect to primary conduct on the part of private 4 actors that has already occurred." O'Melveny, 512 U.S. at 88. Therefore, the Court rejects the 5 FDIC-R's third assertion.

6 The FDIC-R has not presented persuasive argument, analysis, or authority showing that 7 the "no-duty" rule applies to the current case. The Court, therefore, rejects the FDIC-R's request 8 for summary judgment based on the "no-duty" rule.

9 C. The Federal Tort Claims Act

10 The FDIC-R's third argument is that the FTCA bars Defendants' affirmative defenses.
11 However, the FDIC-R's argument fails because it does identify any authoritative Nevada law 12 that supports its assertion. Additionally, sovereign immunity and the FTCA do not, by 13 themselves, bar a defendant's affirmative defenses. Finally, if the Court were to apply the FTCA 14 to affirmative defenses, it would judicially create a federal rule and alter FIRREA, which is 15 discouraged under O'Melveny.

16 In its third argument, the FDIC-R argues that Defendants cannot assert affirmative 17 defenses that rely on the FDIC's alleged acts or omissions. Specifically, the FDIC-R argues that 18 the FTCA discretionary function exception bars Defendants' affirmative defenses because they 19 rely on the FDIC-R's discretionary actions.

20 As stated previously, Nevada law governs a defendant's affirmative defense against the 21 FDIC-R. See O'Melveny, 512 U.S. at 86. The FDIC-R does not cite (and the Court has not 22 found) any controlling Nevada law that bars a defendant's affirmative defense under the FTCA 23 discretionary function exception. In the absence of controlling state law, the Court must predict 24 how the Supreme Court of Nevada would determine this issue. Dimidowich, 803 F.2d at 1482.

25 The FTCA waives sovereign immunity for the negligent or wrongful acts of Government 26 employees. Gaubert, 499 U.S. at 319 n.4. Sovereign immunity means that "that the United States

1 may not be sued without its consent and that the existence of consent is a prerequisite for 2 jurisdiction.” U.S. v. Mitchell, 463 U.S. 206, 212 (1983). The FTCA is subject to several 3 exceptions. See 28 U.S.C. § 2680. One of these exceptions, the discretionary function exception, 4 protects federal agencies from “[a]ny claim based upon...performance or the failure to exercise
5 or perform a discretionary function or duty on the part of a federal agency....” 28 U.S.C. § 6 2680(a). In essence, the discretionary function exception presumes that an agency’s acts are 7 grounded in governmental policy when a statute, regulation, or agency guideline allows the 8 agency to exercise discretion. See Gaubert, 499 U.S. at 324. The purpose of this exception is to 9 prevent judicial second-guessing of legislative and administrative decisions through the medium 10 of an action in tort. Id. at 323. If an agency wishes to invoke discretionary function exception, it 11 bears the burden of proving the exception applies. See Prescott v. U.S., 973 F.2d 696, 702 (9th 12 Cir. 1992).

13 Courts are divided as to whether this exception applies to affirmative defenses. Compare 14 Massachusetts Mut. Life Ins. Co., 93 F. Supp. 2d at 307 (holding that FTCA’s discretionary 15 function exception has no place in the court’s analysis of the defendant’s affirmative defenses) 16 with FDIC v. Stanley, 770 F. Supp. 1281, 1309 (N.D.MD. 1991) (holding that the FTCA’s 17 discretionary function exception protects the FDIC-R actions when it acts as receiver of a failed 18 bank). Courts that apply the discretionary function exception to affirmative defenses feel that 19 barring affirmative defenses against the FDIC-R furthers the policy behind the FTCA. Bierman, 20 2 F.3d at 1440-41. Courts that decline to apply the discretionary function exception to 21 affirmative defenses feel that the language of the statute limits the discretionary function 22 exception to claims. See Massachusetts Mut. Life Ins. Co., 93 F. Supp. 2d at 307.

23 The issue before the Court in this case is similar to the issue before the Supreme Court of 24 Nevada in Schettler v. RalRon Capital Corp. In Schettler, the Supreme Court of Nevada
25 determined whether a FIRREA’s jurisdictional bar applied to claims, defenses, and affirmative 26 defenses, or just to claims. Schettler, 275 P.3d at 936. The Supreme Court of Nevada held that,

1 because FIRREA’s jurisdictional bar did not contain the term “defense,” “affirmative defense,” 2 or “proposed affirmative defense” in its statutory language, FIRREA’s jurisdictional bar did not 3 apply to defenses or affirmative defenses. See Id. at 939-40. Schettler’s holding suggests to this 4 Court that a statute’s plain language is extremely important to the Supreme Court of Nevada. It 5 also suggests that the Supreme Court of Nevada will not apply a statute to a defense or an 6 affirmative defense if the statute’s language only applies to a claim.

7 With this in mind, the Court turns to the language of the FTCA discretionary function 8 exception, which states:

9 The provisions of this chapter and section 1346(b) of this title shall not apply to--

10 Any claim based upon an act or omission of an employee of the Government, 11 exercising due care, in the execution of a statute or regulation, whether or not 12 such statute or regulation be valid, or based upon the exercise or performance or 13 the failure to exercise or perform a discretionary function or duty on the part of a 14 federal agency or an employee of the Government, whether or not the discretion 15 involved be abused.

16 28 U.S.C. § 2680(a).

17 The discretionary function exception expressly applies to “any claim” and does not 18 include the term “defense,” “affirmative defense,” or “proposed affirmative defense”. As 19 previously mentioned, the distinction between claims and defenses in the language of a statute 20 appears to be important to the Supreme Court of Nevada. See Schettler 275 P.3d at 939-40.
21 Therefore, the Court does not believe that the Supreme Court of Nevada would bar Defendants’
22 affirmative defenses under the FTCA discretionary function exception.⁴

23 Furthermore, at its root, the discretionary function exception simply withdraws the 24 consent necessary to overcome sovereign immunity and sue the Government. See 28 U.S.C. § 25 2680. Sovereign immunity, when applied, is a defense against suit. See Mitchell, 463 U.S. at 26 ⁴ Similarly, the Court cannot bar Defendants’ affirmative defenses under the state equivalent of the FTCA, N.R.S. 41.032. N.R.S. 41.032 expressly applies to “actions” and does not include the term “defense,” “affirmative defense,” or “proposed affirmative defense”. See N.R.S. 41.032.

1 212. It is not a defense against affirmative defenses. Consequently, if the discretionary function 2 exception were to apply in the present case, it would only bar a cause of action against the 3 FDIC-R; it would not protect the FDIC-R from a defendant's affirmative defenses.

4 What the FDIC-R truly desires is for the Court to judicially create a federal rule to protect 5 the FDIC-R from Defendants' affirmative defenses. This federal rule (which the Court will call 6 the "discretionary function" rule) would protect the FDIC-R from affirmative defenses that rely 7 on the FDIC's discretionary actions. However, the judicial creation of federal rules is strongly 8 discouraged by the Supreme Court. O'Melveny, 512 U.S. at 87. Furthermore, the FDIC-R has 9 identified no significant conflict with an identifiable federal policy or interest that would 10 persuade the Court to judicially create a "discretionary function" rule. Consequently, the Court 11 cannot judicially create the "discretionary function" rule the FDIC-R desires.

12 The FDIC-R's argument has not identified any applicable Nevada law. Additionally, 13 Nevada case law suggests that the Supreme Court of Nevada would not apply the FTCA 14 discretionary function exception to the present case. Finally, the FDIC-R's argument would 15 require the Court to judicially create the "discretionary function" rule without fulfilling the 16 requirements laid out by the Supreme Court. This Court, therefore, rejects the FDIC-R's third 17 argument.

18 i. The "Discretionary Function" Rule in Other Circuits

19 The Court notes that two circuit courts adopted the "discretionary function" rule 20 post-O'Melveny. See F.D.I.C. v. Mijalis, 15 F.3d 1314, 1324 (5th Cir. 1994) (holding that the 21 FTCA discretionary function exception bars the affirmative defense of failure to mitigate 22 damages against the FDIC); Oldenburg, 38 F.3d at 1121-22 (holding that the FTCA discretionary 23 function exception bars the affirmative defenses of contributory negligence and mitigation of 24 damages against the FDIC). This Court, however, respectfully disagrees with the holdings of the 25 Fifth and Tenth circuit courts because they judicially created a federal rule without fulfilling the 26 requirements set out by the U.S. Supreme Court in O'Melveny.

1 When they adopted the “discretionary function” rule, the Fifth and Tenth Circuit
2 courts relied almost exclusively on the Seventh Circuit’s reasoning in Bierman. See Mijalis, 15 3 F.3d at 1324; Oldenburg, 38 F.3d at 1121. In Bierman, the Seventh Circuit addressed the issue of 4 whether affirmative defenses could be asserted against the FDIC-R. Bierman, 2 F.3d at 1438-41.
5 The Seventh Circuit noted that Congress created the FDIC to promote stability and confidence in 6 the nation’s banking system. Id. at 1438. It also noted the policy concerns of several district 7 courts that barred affirmative defenses against the FDIC. See Id. at 1438-39. The Seventh Circuit 8 stated:

9 Congress has made it clear that the FDIC is to exercise its discretion in 10 choosing a course of action in its efforts to replenish the fund. At the time 11 of these transactions, the governing statute provided that “[t]he 12 Corporation, in its discretion, may ... purchase and liquidate or sell any 13 part of the assets of an insured bank.” 12 U.S.C. § 1823(d) (1988).
14 Therefore, when the FDIC acts to replenish the insurance fund through the 15 disposition of assets of the failed bank, including the right of action 16 against the officers and directors, it has no duty first to attempt to mitigate 17 the damages attributed to those individuals by seeking other, and perhaps 18 less sure, avenues of relief.

19 Id. at 1439-40. The Seventh Circuit then decided to bar the defendant’s affirmative defenses 20 under the FTCA discretionary function exception. See Id. at 1439-41. In making its decision, the 21 Seventh Circuit acknowledged that “the decision of the FDIC to initiate a suit . . . is not precisely 22 the same function as that at issue in Gaubert.” Id. at 1440. However, the Seventh Circuit applied 23 the FTCA discretionary function exception because it felt that it was consonant with the purpose 24 of the FTCA. Id. at 1440-41.

25 This Court respectfully disagrees with the Seventh Circuit’s decision in Bierman, 26 and consequently the Fifth and Tenth Circuit courts, because the Bierman court judicially created a federal rule, which was later overruled by the Supreme Court in O’Melveny. In O’Melveny, the Supreme Court held that the judicial creation of a federal rule was not justified unless there is a “significant conflict between some federal policy or interest and the use of state law.”
O’Melveny, 512 U.S. at 87. In Bierman, however, the Seventh Circuit did not identify a

1 significant conflict between federal policy and the use of state law when it judicially created the 2 “discretionary function” rule. See Bierman, 2 F.3d at 1438-41. Instead, it analyzed the policies, 3 rules, and concerns of other district courts. See Id. A district court’s policies, rules, and concerns, 4 however, do not justify the judicial creation of the “discretionary function” rule under 5 O’Melveny. See O’Melveny, 512 U.S. at 87. Therefore, this Court respectfully disagrees with 6 the reasoning of the Seventh, Fifth, and Tenth Circuits.

7 Furthermore, in the present case, the FDIC-R has not identified (and this Court 8 has not found) a significant conflict between federal policy and the use of Nevada law.
9 Therefore, this Court would not be justified in creating or adopting the “discretionary function” 10 rule to bar Defendants’ affirmative defenses.

11 IV. Conclusion

12 Accordingly, it is HEREBY ORDERED that Plaintiff Federal Deposit Insurance 13 Corporation’s, as Receiver of Silver State Bank, Motion for Partial Summary Judgment (#153) is 14 DENIED IN PART as to Defendants’ affirmative defenses;

15 IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Defendants Johnson’s (#192), French’s (#188, 16 #189), and Gardner’s (#177, #190) Joinders are GRANTED.
