

1 UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
2 DISTRICT OF NEVADA

3 ***

4
5 MARGARET PATTON,

6 Plaintiff,

2:12-cv-02142-GMN-VCF

7 vs.

8 ORDER

9 WAL-MART STORES, INC.,

10 Defendant.

11
12 Before the court is Plaintiff Margaret A. Patton’s Motion for Sanctions for the Spoliation of 13 Evidence (#26¹). Defendant Walmart Stores, Inc. filed an opposition (#32); and, Patton replied (#34).

14
15 BACKGROUND²

16 This matter arises out of Plaintiff Margaret Patton’s slip and fall at a Walmart in Henderson,
17 Nevada. (Pl.’s Mot. for Sanctions (#26) at 3:1–4). The relevant facts include: (1) the circumstances
18 surrounding Patton’s slip and fall; (2) the allegations in Patton’s complaint; and (3) the events leading to 19 the discovery dispute before the court. Each is discussed below.

20
21
22 ¹ Pathetical citations refer to the court’s docket.

23 ² During the court’s November 15, 2013 hearing, counsel stipulated to these facts, which the court read into the 24 record in order to clarify the dispute before the court. The court notes that because this an interlocutory order, the 25 stipulation was for the limited purpose of deciding the motion before the court. *See City of Los Angeles, Harbor
Div. v. Santa Monica Baykeeper*, 254 F.3d 882, 885 (9th Cir. 2001) (“As long as a district court has jurisdiction over the case, then it possesses the inherent procedural power to reconsider, rescind, or modify an interlocutory order for cause seen by it to be sufficient.”).

1 I. Margaret Patton’s Slip and Fall

2 On June 10, 2011, Michael Burton—a Walmart stock employee—headed for aisle four. (Mins.
3 Proceedings #49). The coffee merchandise needed replenishing. As Burton later testified, he pulled—
4 and not pushed—his cart through the store. Burton had been trained to keep his back to the cart, remain
5 alert, and be on the lookout for obstacles and broken items on the floor. (Id.)

6 Burton rounded the corner and pulled his cart into aisle four’s east end. (Id.) A single customer
7 was shopping for salad dressing at the far west end. (Id.) He passed the barbeque sauce and stopped in 8 front of the coffee section. (Id.) As he would later recall, the floor appeared clean and dry to him. (Id.)
9 Burton parked his cart, faced the shelf, and began stocking products. (Id.)

10 Minutes later, someone screamed. (Id.) Burton turned. (Id.) He saw Margaret Patton, near the 11 barbeque sauce. (Id.) She was lying next to a large amount of liquid, just ten-to-fifteen feet away, along
12 the very path Burton had just traversed one or two minutes before. (Id.) She was injured. (Id.)

13 Another employee arrived; he had heard the scream. (Pl.’s Mot. for Sanctions (#26) Exhibit B at 14 20:11–23). Onlookers gathered. (Id. at 20:21–22, 27:23). The other employee called the store manager, 15 but he was unavailable. (Id. at 21:16) Soon an assistant manager arrived, and Burton left. (Id. at 22:5–7).

16 Burton resumed stocking shelves, but in another aisle. (Id.) Meanwhile, paramedics placed 17 Patton on a stretcher and took her away. (Pl.’s Mot. for Sanctions (#26) Exhibit D at 31). She was 18 immediately admitted to a hospital, where she would remain for over twenty-four hours. (Id. at 36:7– 19 13). Later that day, Burton and the assistant manager completed written reports detailing Patton’s fall, 20 and the assistant manager requested that video surveillance be copied and preserved. (Pl.’s Mot. for 21 Sanctions (#26) at 4:16–28, 5:5, 5:10–11).
22
23
24
25

1 II. Patton Files Suit

2 Twenty-six days later, Patton hired an attorney. (See Pl.’s Reply (#34) at 7:23–28). On July 6,
3 2011, the attorney sent Walmart a letter notifying the company that Patton was now represented. (Id.)
4 The letter also instructed Walmart, in boldfaced type, to “ensure that any and all video surveillance tapes
5 . . . pertaining to this matter remain completely undisturbed.” (Id.) On July 19, 2011, Patton received a
6 response. (Id.) Nicole Knysch of Sedgwich Claims Management Service, Inc., the claims handler for 7 Walmart, confirmed that Patton’s letter had been received. (Id. at 8:9–10) (citing (#34-4) Exhibit C at 1).

8 Approximately forty-five days after Patton’s fall, on or about July 25, 2011, the digital memory
9 in Walmart’s surveillance system exceeded its capacity and the DVR system automatically overwrote
10 previous data. (See Def.’s Opp’n (#32-2) Exhibit A, Aff. of Kelli Briggs, Asset Protection Manager at 11 3:7–10).

12 On October 29, 2012, Patton filed a negligence action in state court. (Compl. (#1-2) Exhibit B at 13 1). On December 17, 2012, Walmart removed the action to federal court. (Id. (#1) at 1). Patton alleges, 14 among other things, that Walmart failed to properly inspect its floors. (Pl.’s Mot. for Sanctions (#26) at 15 6:14–18). In response, Walmart contends, among other things, that it breached no duty of care and that 16 an unidentified shopper must have caused the spill that led to Patton’s fall. (Id.)

17 III. The Discovery Dispute & Walmart’s Document Preservation Directive

18 Discovery is now closed. One of the key facts that Patton attempted discover was the source of 19 the liquid that caused Patton’s slip and fall. In early April, Patton served Walmart with a request for 20 production of documents, which demanded all surveillance footage of aisle four from the day in 21 question. (Pl.’s Mot. for Sanctions (#26-6) Exhibit G at 4). But, Walmart did not produce any footage
22 from before or during the accident because, Walmart argues, none exists. (Id.)
23
24
25

1 Pursuant to Walmart’s “document preservation directive,” (see Pl.’s Mot. (#26-5) Exhibit E), if
2 video surveillance captures an incident in the store, Walmart preserves footage from one hour before the
3 incident until the incident occurs. (Def.’s Opp’n (#32-2) Exhibit A, Aff. of Kelli Briggs at 3:16–17)
4 (explaining how Walmart interprets and implements the document preservation directive). If, however,
5 video surveillance does not capture an incident, then Walmart preserves footage from the area closest to 6 the incident from the time the incident is reported until the customer exits. (Id. at 3:18–22). Following
7 Patton’s slip and fall, Walmart reviewed its surveillance footage but found nothing. (Def.’s Opp’n (#32)
8 at 3:14–18). Because no camera captured Patton’s slip and fall, Walmart preserved and produced video 9 footage of the east entrance of aisle four from the time the incident was reported until one hour and six 10 minutes later. (Pl.’s Mot. (#26) at 6:7–9).

11 On June 7, 2013, Patton deposed Burton. (Id. at Exhibit B). But, the deposition also failed to 12 locate the liquid’s source, in part, because Burton testified to following Walmart’s policies perfectly:
13 Burton kept his back to his cart and looked down the aisle for obstacles before turning to face the shelf
14 and stock the coffee. (Id. at 37:1–3) (“I’m positive that it [i.e., the water] wasn’t there while I entered. It 15 [i.e., the spill] had to have occurred after I entered”).

16 Patton moves for discovery sanctions, arguing that Walmart must have destroyed relevant
17 evidence. Patton contends that it is axiomatic that Walmart had relevant video footage and that Walmart
18 should have known to preserve the footage. (See Pl.’s Mot. (#26) at 7:3–7).

20 LEGAL STANDARD

21 Spoliation is the destruction or significant alteration of evidence, or the failure to preserve
22 property for another’s use as evidence in pending or reasonably foreseeable litigation. United States
23 v. Kitsap Physicians Svs., 314 F.3d 995, 1001 (9th Cir. 2002) (citing Akiona v. United States, 938 F.2d
24 158, 161 (9th Cir. 1991)) (a party engages in spoliation “as a matter of law only if they had ‘some notice
25

1 that the documents were potentially relevant' to the litigation before they were destroyed"). A party
2 must preserve evidence it knows or should know is relevant to a claim or defense of any party, or that
3 may lead to the discovery of relevant evidence. Kitsap Physicians Serv., 314 F.3d at 1001; In re Napster,
4 462 F. Supp. 2d 1060, 1067 (N.D. Cal. 2006) (citing Nat'l Ass'n of Radiation Survivors v. Turnage, 115
5 F.R.D. 543, 556–57 (N.D. Cal. 1987) (noting, “[a]s soon as a potential claim is identified, a litigant is 6 under a duty to preserve evidence which it knows or reasonably should know is relevant to the action”).

7 There are two sources of authority under which a district court can sanction a party who has 8 despoiled evidence: the inherent power of federal courts to levy sanctions in response to abusive
9 litigation practices, and the availability of sanctions under Rule 37 against a party who “fails to obey an 10 order to provide or permit discovery.” Leon v. IDX Sys. Corp., 464 F.3d 951, 958 (9th Cir. 2006) (citing
11 Fjelstad v. Am. Honda Motor Co., Inc., 762 F.2d 1334, 1337 (9th Cir. 1985); FED. R. CIV. P.
12 37(b)(2)(C). Federal courts sitting in diversity jurisdiction apply federal law when addressing issues of 13 spoliation of evidence. Glover v. BIC Corp., 6 F.3d 1318, 1329 (9th Cir.1993) (applying federal law
14 when addressing spoliation in diversity litigation); accord Adkins v. Wolever, 554 F.3d 650, 652 (6th 15 Cir. 2009); Silvestri v. Gen. Motors Corp., 271 F.3d 583, 590 (4th Cir. 2001); Reilly v. Natwest Mkts.
16 Group Inc., 181 F.3d 253, 267 (2d Cir. 1999).

17
18 Where, as here, the moving party requests an adverse inference jury instruction,³ the moving 19 party must establish: (1) the party having control over the evidence had an obligation to preserve it at the 20

21
22 ³ Patton’s papers present conflicting requests for relief. She states at various points that she moves the court for 23 (1) “a rebuttal presumption,” (see Pl.’s Mot. (#26) at 7:10), (2) a “mandatory presumption” (see id. at 8:25, 12:9),
24 and (3) an adverse inference jury instruction, (see id. at 12:12); (see also Pl.’s Reply (#34) at 15:8). A rebuttable
25 presumption requires a showing of intent to harm. See, e.g., Gonzalez v. Las Vegas Metro. Police Dept., No. 09– cv–0381, 2012 WL 1118949, at *2 (D. Nev. April 2, 2012). Because Patton did not argue intent, she failed to satisfy her burden. With regard to a mandatory presumption, the only authority Patton cites is from the Southern District of New York. (See Pl.’s Mot. (#26) at 8:25). This authority is persuasive, not controlling. Additionally,
Patton did not present arguments regarding the elements of a mandatory presumption. (See generally id.) The

1 time it was destroyed; (2) the records were destroyed with a culpable state of mind; and (3) the 2 destroyed evidence was relevant to the party's claim or defense such that a reasonable trier of fact could
3 find that it would support that claim or defense." In re Napster, Inc. Copyright Litig., 462 F. Supp. 2d
4 1060, 1078 (N.D. Cal. 2006) (citing Hamilton v. Signature Flight Support Corp., No. C 05-0490, 2005
5 WL 3481423, at *3, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 40088 at *9 (N.D. Cal. Dec. 20, 2005); Residential Funding
6 Corp. v. DeGeorge Fin. Corp., 306 F.3d 99, 107 (2d Cir.2002)).

7 8 DISCUSSION

9 Patton moves the court to impose discovery sanctions on Walmart for destroying evidence
10 relevant to her slip and fall. The threshold question that court must decide, therefore, is whether relevant 11 evidence existed. See, e.g., Epstein v. Toys-R-Us Delaware, Inc., 277 F. Supp. 2d 1266, 1276–77 (S.D.
12 Fla. 2003) (holding that to prevail on a motion for sanctions for the destruction of a videotape, the 13 moving party must establish facts indicating that the video existed). If no relevant evidence existed, then 14 Patton's motion is moot. If, however, relevant evidence did exist, then the question is whether Walmart
15 had a duty to preserve the evidence. The court addresses each issue below.

16 17 I. Relevant Evidence of Patton's Slip and Fall Existed

18 The primary issue the court must address is whether relevant evidence existed. The court 19 resolves this question by discussing, first, whether surveillance footage of aisle four actually existed and,
20 second, whether the surveillance footage, if any, was relevant to Patton's complaint.

21
22
23
24 court, therefore, construes Patton's motion as requesting an adverse inference instruction. See Med. Lab Mgmt.
25 Consultants v. Am. Broad. Cos., Inc., 306 F.3d 806, 824 (9th Cir. 2002) ("A federal trial court has the inherent discretionary power to make appropriate evidentiary rulings in response to the destruction or spoliation of relevant evidence.")

1 A. *Surveillance Footage of Aisle Four Existed

2 Walmart insists, “there was never any surveillance footage of the slip-and-fall incident or the
3 surrounding area” because no camera could have captured the slip and fall. (Def.’s Opp’n (#32) at 4 2:10–11, 5:1–4) (emphasis original). Walmart provides two affidavits with the following facts to 5 substantiate this claim. (See Def.’s Opp’n (#32-2) Exhibit A, Aff. of Kelli Briggs, Asset Protection
6 Manager; Dec. of Marjan Hajimirzaee). “PTZ Camera 5” was the nearest camera to aisle four. (Id.) PTZ
7 signifies camera five’s ability to pan, tilt, zoom, and turn 360 degrees. (Id.) Under normal conditions,
8 PTZ Camera 5 could have captured the east entrance to aisle four. (Id.) But, on the day in question, two 9 facts prevented PTZ Camera 5 from capturing relevant footage. (Id.) First, PTZ Camera 5 had 10 preprogrammed default position focusing on aisles six and seven. (Id.) Second, a tall, mobile shelving
11 structure, known as a “high velocity gondola,” stood between aisles four and five and blocked PTZ
12 Camera 5’s view of the east entrance to aisle four. (Id.)

13 Patton’s reply, however, includes a still image from a Walmart surveillance camera that shows
14 the east entrance to aisle four on June 10, 2011. (See Pl.’s Reply (#34) at 5). According to Patton, “[a]
15 paramedic and a stretcher are visible in the photograph.” (Id. at 4:21–22). During the court’s hearing, 16 Walmart did not dispute that the image proffered by Patton is, in fact, an image of the east entrance to 17 aisle four on June 10, 2011. (See Mins. Proceedings #49). The court, therefore, concludes that Patton has 18 satisfied her burden of establishing that footage of aisle four existed. See, e.g., Epstein, 277 F. Supp. 2d 19 at 1276–77.
20

21 B. *The Surveillance Footage of Aisle Four Contained Relevant Evidence

22 The court now turns to the question of whether the surveillance footage was relevant. Walmart
23 argues that it was not relevant because (1) Patton fell ten-to-fifteen feet into aisle four where no camera
24 monitored customer activity and (2) pursuant to its document preservation directive, Walmart reviewed
25

1 surveillance footage following the slip and fall but found nothing. (See, e.g., Def.’s Opp’n (#32) at 3:14–
2 19) (“Walmart did search for surveillance footage of Plaintiff’s incident, . . . it was discovered that there
3 was no camera shot of the slip-and-fall”).

4 Walmart’s arguments are unpersuasive. Under Walmart’s document preservation directive, if
5 video surveillance captures an incident in the store, Walmart preserves footage from one hour before the
6 incident until the incident occurs. (Aff. of Kelli Briggs (#32-2) at 3:16–17). If, however, video 7 surveillance does not capture an incident, then Walmart preserves footage of the area closest to the 8 incident from the time the incident is reported until the customer exits. (Id. at 18–22). Following
9 Patton’s slip and fall, Walmart reviewed its surveillance footage, concluded that “nothing” was caught
10 on film because Patton’s fall was not caught on film. (See Def.’s Opp’n (#32) at 3:14–19). Walmart,
11 therefore, produced video footage of the east entrance of aisle four for a period of one hour and six 12 minutes after the fall was reported.

13
14 The initial problem with Walmart’s argument, and its document preservation directive, is that 15 Walmart made a conclusion—(viz. that “nothing” was caught on film)—that was not Walmart’s to 16 make. Whether “nothing” or “something” was caught on film is an evidentiary question of relevance.
17 This determination is the court’s, and not Walmart’s, to make. See FED. R. EVID. 401.

18 The overarching problem with Walmart’s argument and its document preservation directive,
19 however, is that “nothing” is something. Even if “nothing” was caught on film, camera five’s video
20 footage is probative because it tends to make the fact that Walmart maintained safe premises more
21 probable than not. See FED. R. EVID. 401. “Nothing” would show: (1) an empty and unobstructed east
22 entrance; (2) rows of barbeque sauce and other liquids that had not fallen or leaked; and (3) a ceiling that 23 kept water from dripping down and puddling on the floor. “Nothing,” therefore, would be central to 24
25

1 Patton's negligence claim because nothing would tend to show that Walmart did not breach its duty of 2 care.

3 Something rather than "nothing," however, was caught on film. The video footage from the time
4 before Patton's fall was reported must have recorded Burton either pushing or pulling his cart. If Burton
5 was pushing the cart, then camera five's video footage would tend to make Patton's allegation that 6 Walmart failed to properly inspect aisle four more probable than not because Burton could not have
7 seen obstructions, like a puddle of liquid, as he entered aisle four. Id. But, because Walmart's document
8 preservation directive purportedly instructed employees to only preserve video footage after the incident
9 was reported, Walmart's policy prevented Patton from discovering relevant evidence. In fact,
10 assuming—as Walmart represents—that its employees implemented the document preservation directive
11 correctly, then the policy itself demonstrates that Walmart destroyed relevant and probative evidence.

12 During the court's November 15, 2013 hearing, Walmart attempted to frame the issue raised by 13 Patton's motion as really a complaint about not having enough evidence. (See Mins. Proceedings #49).
14 Walmart insisted that it produced all relevant evidence in its possession and that granting Patton's 15 motion would, in effect, create new law by imposing discovery obligations on responding parties that 16 mandate the production of all evidence, not just relevant evidence. (Id.)

17 This is not the case. Patton does not seek all evidence that Walmart may have possessed. Patton 18 seeks the most relevant and probative evidence that Walmart, in fact, possessed. Trial of this case will 19 focus on causation. Patton moves for sanctions because Walmart destroyed the best evidence regarding 20 the central issue. Granting Patton's motion, therefore, does not create new law. On the contrary, it
21 affirms the heart existing law. Namely, that evidence of proximate cause is relevant to a negligence
22 claim. See, e.g., Palsgraf v. Long Island R.R. Co., 248 N.Y. 339, 344, 162 N.E. 99 (1928) (discussing 23
24
25

1 proximate cause); see also Sprague v. Lucky Stores, Inc., 849 P.2d 320, 322 (Nev. 1993) (discussing
2 premises liability and negligence under Nevada law).

3 II. An Adverse Inference Jury Instruction is Warranted

4 Having concluded that Walmart destroyed relevant surveillance footage of Patton’s slip and fall,
5 the court must now examine whether Patton has satisfied her burden of demonstrating that an adverse
6 inference jury instruction is warranted. As discussed above, the party requesting an adverse inference 7 jury instruction must establish: (1) the party having control over the evidence had an obligation to 8 preserve it at the time it was destroyed; (2) the records were destroyed with a culpable state of mind; and 9 (3) the destroyed evidence was relevant to the party’s claim or defense such that a reasonable trier of 10 fact could find that it would support that claim or defense.” In re Napster, Inc. Copyright Litig., 462 F.
11 Supp. 2d 1060, 1078 (N.D. Cal. 2006).

12 The court has already concluded that the lost surveillance footage is relevant to Patton’s
13 negligence claim. (See supra § I.B). The court, therefore, limits its discussion to whether Walmart had a 14 duty to preserve the evidence and whether it destroyed the evidence with a culpable state of mind.
15

16 A. *Walmart had a Duty to Preserve the Relevant Evidence

17 The duty to preserve arises not only during litigation, but also extends to the period before 18 litigation when a party should reasonably know that evidence may be relevant to anticipated litigation.
19 In re Napster, 462 F. Supp. 2d at 1067. A party must preserve evidence it knows or should know is 20 relevant to a claim or defense of any party, or that may lead to the discovery of relevant evidence. Kitsap
21 Physicians Serv., 314 F.3d at 1001; see also Nat’l Ass’n of Radiation Survivors, 115 F.R.D. at 556–57
22 (“As soon as a potential claim is identified, a litigant is under a duty to preserve evidence which it 23 knows or reasonably should know is relevant to the action”).
24
25

1 The parties dispute whether the following two events triggered Walmart’s duty to preserve the 2 video footage: (1) Walmart’s document preservation directive; and (2) Patton’s letter of representation,
3 which directed Walmart to preserve “any and all video surveillance tapes . . . pertaining to this matter.”
4 (See generally Def.’s Opp’n (#32) 6–19); (see generally Pl.’s Reply (#34) at 6–14). The court discusses 5 each below.

6 1. Walmart’s Document Preservation Directive Created a Duty to Preserve
7 Evidence

8 Patton argues that Walmart had a duty to preserve video footage of aisle four from the period
9 before the fall was reported “because [Walmart] has a protocol to preserve video surveillance.” (Pl.’s 10 Mot. (#26) at 9:25–26). In response, Walmart argues that the mere existence of a document
11 preservation directive is insufficient to trigger a duty to preserve evidence. (Def.’s Opp’n (#32) 9–13).

12 Walmart’s argument is correct. Patton cannot satisfy her burden by resting on the mere fact that 13 Walmart adopted a document preservation policy. Patton must show that Walmart had notice that the 14 video surveillance footage of aisle four before and during the fall “may be relevant to future litigation.”
15 In re Napster, 462 F. Supp. 2d at 1067; see also Kitsap Physicians Serv., 314 F.3d 995 at 1001.
16 Accordingly, although the mere existence of Walmart’s policy did not give Walmart notice that the June 17 10, 2011 footage “may be relevant to future litigation,” the court holds that the manner in which 18 Walmart decided to implement its document preservation directive did.

19 The manner in which Walmart implements its document preservation directive is facially
20 suspect. As represented in Walmart’s filings and at oral argument, if an incident occurs off camera, then 21 Walmart automatically destroys—or fails to preserve—surveillance footage before or during the 22 incident. (See Mins. Proceedings #49); (see also Aff. of Kelli Briggs, Walmart Asset Protection 23 Manager (#32-3) at 3:18–22) (“[I]f our search revealed that there were no cameras that captured the 24
25

1 customer's incident, Store 2838's Asset Protection team preserved footage of the closest area to the 2 incident and preserved footage from the time the incident was reported to management until the time the 3 customer left the store."); (see also Def.'s Opp'n (#32) at 3:9–13) ("If, however, the search revealed that
4 there were no cameras that captured the custom's incident, Store 2838's Asset Protection team preserved
5 footage of the closest area to the incident and preserved footage from the time the incident was reported
6 to management until the time the customer left the store.") (emphasis original).⁴

7 As discussed above, surveillance footage of a slip and fall is relevant even when the fall occurs
8 off camera and "nothing" is captured on film. See supra § I.B (stating that the lost footage would 9 (1) have captured the conditions of the east entrance of aisle four; (2) have recorded Burton either 10 pulling his cart, and looking for obstacles along the way, or pushing his cart and—perhaps—overlooking 11 the puddle of water that caused Patton's injuries; and (3) be essential to both Walmart's claim that it did 12 not breach its duty of care and Patton's claim that Walmart failed to keep the premises reasonably safe).
13 Walmart's document preservation directive, however, effectively states that footage of off-camera 14 incidents is never relevant because the policy mandates that footage of off-camera incidents are 15 deleted—(or failed to be preserved)—as a matter of course.

17 The assertion implied in Walmart's policy—viz., that footage of off-camera incidents is never 18 relevant—is untrue as a matter of law. Relevant evidence is not limited to direct evidence. It is well 19 established that relevant evidence is broadly construed for both evidentiary and discovery purposes.

21
22 ⁴ There is a discrepancy between the actual language of Walmart's document preservation directive and how 23 Walmart purportedly interprets it. In its filings and during the courts hearing, Walmart represented that the above 24 quotations accurately reflect how the policy is implemented. (See Mins. Proceedings #49). The court, therefore,
25 defers to Walmart's interpretation of its own policy. However, the record should reflect that the relevant portion of the directive, in fact, states: "SURVEILLANCE VIDEO (one hour before and one hour after) depicting area where the incident occurred and any condition (e.g., pallet, end-cap, cart, etc.) involved. If the incident involved an identified substance, also collect video from the area where any product containing the substance was displayed or sold. If none, explain." (See Document Preservation Directive (#26-5) at 1).

1 See FED. R. EVID. 401 (defining relevant evidence as evidence that has any tendency to make a fact of 2 consequence more or less probable) (emphasis added); see also City of Rialto v. U.S. Dept. of Defense,
3 492 F. Supp. 2d 1193, 1202 (C.D. Cal. 2007) (defining discoverable information as information that has 4 any possibility that the information sought may be relevant to the claim or defense of any party”)
5 (emphasis added). Walmart’s document preservation directive ignores these well-settled principles and,
6 thereby, impedes litigants from discovering relevant evidence.

7 During the court’s hearing, Walmart argued that the court cannot conclude that Walmart should
8 have known to preserve the footage because doing so requires imputing legal knowledge to Walmart’s
9 layperson employees. The court disagrees. First, Walmart itself requires layperson employees to comply
10 with the law’s discovery and evidentiary requirements. Its document preservation directive alters 11 employees, in boldfaced type, to preserve all “potentially relevant” evidence because the company “may 12 have a legal obligation to preserve information.” (See Document Preservation Directive (#26-5) at 1).
13 Second, the court does not need to impute legal knowledge to Walmart employees to conclude that 14 Walmart should have known to preserve the footage because the footage is “relevant” under a common,
15 everyday understanding of the word. See MERRIAM-WEBSTER’S COLLEGIATE DICTIONARY 985 (10th ed.
16 2001) (defining “relevant” as “1 a: having significant and demonstrable bearing on the matter at hand b:
17 affording evidence tending to prove or disprove the matter at issue or under discussion.”).

18 Accordingly, the court finds that Walmart’s duty to preserve the footage arose when Walmart
19 decided to implement the document preservation directive in the manner described by Walmart’s Asset
20 Protection Manager. (See Aff. of Kelli Briggs, Walmart Asset Protection Manager (#32-3) at 1–3)
21 (explaining how Walmart implements the document preservation directive).
22

23 Walmart’s document preservation directive mandates the destruction of potentially relevant
24 evidence as a matter of course. Walmart’s duty to preserve the evidence, therefore, attached the date
25

1 Walmart decided to destroy potentially relevant evidence as a matter of course because that date marks
2 the first time Walmart knew or should have known that it would be destroying potentially relevant
3 evidence. Kitsap Physicians Serv., 314 F.3d at 1001 (citing Akiona v. United States, 938 F.2d 158, 161
4 (9th Cir. 1991) (“Defendants engage in spoliation of documents as a matter of law only if they had
5 ‘some notice that the documents were potentially relevant’ to the litigation before they were 6 destroyed.”).

7 It is unnecessary for the court to decide when, exactly, Walmart decided to implement the 8 document preservation directive in the manner described by Walmart’s Asset Protection Manager. It is 9 sufficient for purposes of this motion that the directive was in place when Patton fell. (See Aff. of Kelli
10 Briggs (#32-2 at 1–3). Similarly, because it is Walmart’s standard operating procedure to destroy
11 potentially relevant evidence, it is also unnecessary for the court to decide when Walmart had notice that 12 Patton would sue. Walmart’s policy existed when Patton entered the store.⁵

14 2. Patton’s Letter of Representation Created a Duty to Preserve Evidence

15 Alternatively, the court also concludes that Patton’s letter of representation created a duty to 16 preserve the surveillance footage of aisle four. As discussed above, on July 6, 2011, on Patton’s attorney 17 notified Walmart that she was represented and instructed the company, in boldfaced type, to “ensure that 18 any and all video surveillance tapes . . . pertaining to this matter remain completely undisturbed.” (See 19 Pl.’s Reply (#34) at 7:23–28); (see also Ltr. of Rep. (#34-3) at 1). This occurred approximately nineteen
20 days before Walmart’s surveillance system exceeded its capacity and automatically overwrote previous 21 data. (See id.); (see also Aff. of Kelli Briggs, Asset Protection Manager (#32-2) at 3:7–10) (discussing 22 Walmart’s DVR surveillance system).

24 ⁵ Although it is unclear when the footage was deleted, the last day that it could have been retained was July 25,
25 2011, forty-five days from Patton’s June 10, 2011 fall. (See Def.’s Opp’n (#32-2) Aff. of Kelli Briggs, Asset Protection Manager at 3:7–10).

1 As a preliminary matter, Walmart argues that Patton is precluded from arguing that the letter of
2 representation created a duty because the argument first appeared in Patton’s reply brief. (See Mot. to 3 Strike (#36) at 2) (citing Zamani v. Carnes, 491 F.3d 990, 997 (9th Cir. 2007) (“The district court need
4 not consider arguments raised for the first time in a reply brief.”)). During the court’s hearing, Walmart
5 stated that if Patton properly raised this argument in her motion, then Walmart would have (1) obtained
6 affidavits from Walmart employees demonstrating that Walmart never received the letter and (2) argued 7 that the letter’s phrase, “pertaining to this matter,” is too vague to give sufficient notice of litigation.
8 (See Mins. Proceedings #49).

9 These arguments are unpersuasive. Assuming, arguendo, that Walmart obtained affidavits and 10 proffered briefs arguing that Patton’s letter is “too vague” to give sufficient notice of litigation, the fact 11 remains that the appropriate corporate representative, Sedwick CMS, Walmart’s claims handler, actually 12 received and understood the letter. (See Sedwick Ltr. (#34-4) at 1) (“Sedgwick Claims Management
13 Services, Inc., is the claims handler for Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., and their insurance carrier concerning 14 customer incidents. We have been advised you represent the above captioned customer and request that 15 all correspondence and inquiries be directed to the attention of this office.”). Patton’s letter of 16 representation, therefore, triggered Walmart’s duty to preserve the evidence.
17

18 B. The Evidence was Destroyed with a Culpable State of Mind

19 The final inquiry the court must make to order an adverse inference jury instruction is whether 20 Walmart destroyed the evidence with a culpable state of mind. The loss or destruction of evidence 21 qualifies as willful spoliation if the party “has some notice that the documents were potentially relevant 22 to the litigation” before they were lost. Leon, 464 F.3d at 959 (citing Kitsap Physicians Serv., 314 F.3d at 23 1001). Conduct amounting to gross negligence is also sufficient culpability to justify an adverse 24 inference instruction. In re Napster, 462 F. Supp. 2d 1078.
25

1 Both of standards are satisfied here. As discussed above, Walmart had notice that the 2 surveillance footage was relevant to litigation before it was destroyed. On July 6, 2011, Patten sent
3 Walmart her letter of representation. (Ltr. of Rep. (#34-3) at 1). On July 19, 2011, Walmart's claims
4 handler responded. (See Sedwick Ltr. (#34-4) at 1). On or about July 25, 2011, the digital memory in 5 Walmart's surveillance system exceeded its capacity and the DVR system automatically overwrote
6 previous data. (See Aff. of Kelli Briggs, Asset Protection Manager (#32-2) at 3:7-10).

7 Additionally, the court finds that Walmart destroyed the surveillance footage with a culpable
8 state of mind even if the footage was lost before Walmart received Patton's letter of representation. As 9 discussed above, Walmart's document preservation directive makes the destruction of potentially 10 relevant evidence standard operating procedure. (See supra § 2.A.1). This is reckless. See BLACK'S LAW
11 DICTIONARY (9th ed. 2009) (defining "reckless" as "the creation of a substantial and unjustifiable risk of 12 harm to others and by a conscious (and sometimes deliberate) disregard for or indifference to that risk;
13 heedless; rash. • Reckless conduct is much more than mere negligence: it is a gross deviation from what 14 a reasonable person would do.").

15
16 In sum, the court finds that an adverse inference jury instruction is warranted because Walmart's
17 destruction of highly probative evidence interferes with the rightful decision of Patton's case. In re
18 Napster, 462 F. Supp. 2d 1075; Apple Inc. v. Samsung Elec. Co., Ltd. 888 F.Supp.2d 976 (N.D. Cal.
19 2012).

20 ACCORDINGLY, and for good cause shown,

21 IT IS ORDERED that Plaintiff Margaret A. Patton's Motion for Sanctions for the Spoliation of 22 Evidence (#26) is GRANTED.

23 IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that an adverse inference jury instruction against Walmart is 24 appropriate sanction in these circumstances. No other sanctions will be imposed at this time.
25

1 Alternatively, if the trial court is not inclined to give an adverse inference instruction, another remedy
2 for the missing video could be having the jury decide the appropriate inferences to be drawn from 3 Walmart's handling of Patton's request to "ensure that any and all video surveillance tapes . . .
4 pertaining to this matter remain completely undisturbed."

5 IT IS SO ORDERED.

6 DATED this 20th day of November, 2013.

7
8

9
10

11 CAM FERENBACH
12 UNITED STATES MAGISTRATE JUDGE
13
14
15
16
17
18
19
20
21
22
23
24
25