Todd VanDeHey and Real Social Dynamics, Inc. (“RSD”) are equal shareholders in Valentine Life, Inc., a Nevada corporation that provides online and in-person classes and instructional materials to men on the topics of attracting and dating women. VanDeHey alleges that RSD and its owners, Nicholas Kho and Owen Cook, harmed Valentine Life. The parties have agreed to mediate this dispute. The case before me does not, however, concern the parties’ dispute or their agreement to mediate it. Rather, VanDeHey sues RSD, Kho, and Cook under NRS 38.222 seeking the provisional remedies of temporary restraint and a mandatory preliminary and permanent injunction until a mediator has been appointed and authorized to act. VanDeHey now moves on an emergency basis for a temporary restraining order and preliminary injunction.¹
