records. (Id.)

Now, in connection with the filing of his Motion for Leave to Amend (Doc. # 72) and Proposed Amended Complaint (Doc. # 72-3), Plaintiff seeks to have his Amended Complaint filed under seal. (Doc. # 72-1.) Plaintiff asserts that the nature of his allegations justify having the pleading filed under seal. He claims that if the defendants or general prison population learn of his allegations he would be subject to retaliation, including physical attack.

This circuit has recognized a common law right of access to judicial records in civil proceedings. See Hagestad v. Tragesser, 49 F.3d 1430, 1433-34 (9th Cir. 1995). This right, however, is not absolute. See Nixon v. Warner Comm., Inc., 435 U.S. 589, 598 (1978). The starting point in determining whether a document should be filed under seal is the "strong presumption in favor of [public] access." See Kamakana v. City and County of Honolulu, 447 F.3d 1172, 1178 (9th Cir. 2006). The party who seeks to seal a document bears the burden of overcoming that presumption by either meeting the "compelling reasons" standard if the document is attached to a dispositive motion, or the "good cause" standard if the document accompanies a non-dispositive motion. Id. at 1180.

Kamakana does not directly address the standard that must be met when a party seeks to file a complaint or amended complaint under seal; however, other district courts that have addressed this issue have determined that the party must meet the compelling reasons standard. See TriQuint Semiconductor, Inc. v. Avago Technologies Ltd., No. CV 09-1531-PHX-JAT, 2010 WL 2474387, at *1 (D. Ariz. June 11, 2010) (citing In re NVIDIA Corp. Derivative Litig., 2008 WL 1859067, at *3 (N.D. Cal. 2008)).

Plaintiff argues that if the Nevada Department of Corrections (NDOC) officials or employees named as defendants in this action, or the general prison population, get wind of his allegations, he will be subject to retaliation. The court finds Plaintiff has not presented specific compelling reasons to justify sealing his pleading. Plaintiff's Proposed Amended Complaint presents (among other things) general allegations that various NDOC officials or employees threatened to injure him. Unfortunately, these allegations are all too common in section 1983 cases filed by inmates. Often times, these complaints contain far more detailed allegations of specific instances of alleged excessive force. Yet, the court has not undertaken to seal all of these records as well. Here, the allegations in the Proposed Amended Complaint are very general. Moreover, in his motion, Plaintiff has not identified a specific threat of violence. Finally, Plaintiff does not endeavor to explain how the defendants would be in a position to respond to his allegations if the court permitted him to file his pleading under seal. It appears that it would be fundamentally unfair and would run afoul of the due process clause to allow a plaintiff to prosecute a lawsuit without giving the defendants an opportunity to review the allegations being made against them and to respond to the same in defense of their case.

With respect to the general prison population, Plaintiff has not identified any particular inmate in his Proposed Amended Complaint; therefore, his statement that he is likely to receive threats of violence in response to the filing of this pleading appears to be unfounded.

The court also notes that much of the information in the Proposed Amended Complaint is already in the public domain. (See Doc. # 4.)

The reasons set forth by Plaintiff simply do not outweigh the public's right of access to the record in this case under these circumstances, and cannot be considered compelling.

Plaintiff relies on various cases in support of his motion, all of which are inapposite here. First, he relies on U.S. v. Doe, 655 F.2d 920 (9th Cir. 1980). This is an opinion in a criminal appeal where the appellant contended that he was entitled to a new evidentiary hearing in his criminal case. Id. Presumably, Plaintiff cites this case as authority because the appellant was permitted to proceed under a pseudonym; however, this case does not address the issue of sealing records in a civil case

Next, Plaintiff relies on U.S. v. Parish, 308 F.3d 1025 (9th Cir. 2002). Again, this is an opinion in a criminal case where the government appealed the trial court's decision to make a downward departure from the sentencing guidelines. Id. Once again, this case has no bearing on the sealing of records in a civil case. Finally, Plaintiff relies on Does I thru XXIII v. Advanced Textile Corp., 214 F.3d 1058 (9th Cir. 2000). This case also does not address the sealing of records in a civil case. Instead, the issue was the propriety of allowing the plaintiffs to proceed under pseudonyms. Id. As stated above, the court previously determined that Plaintiff had not made a sufficient showing to proceed under a pseudonym. (See Doc. # 32.) For the reasons set forth above, Plaintiff's Motion for Leave to File the Amended Complaint Under Seal (Doc. # 72-1) is DENIED. The Clerk is instructed to un-seal the Proposed Amended Complaint (Doc. # 72-3). DATED: February 15, 2013. Colf TED STATES MAGISTRATE JUDGE
