2 (Case called)

3 THE DEPUTY CLERK: Counsel, please state your 4 appearances for the record, beginning with plaintiff.

5 MR. KALAMAJKA: Good morning, your Honor. Frank 6 Kalamajka from Ballon Stoll Bader & Nadler, attorneys on behalf
7 of plaintiff, Nanette LePore.

8 THE COURT: Good morning.

9 MR. YELLEN: Dwight Yellen with Ballon Stoll as well,
10 your Honor.

11 THE COURT: Good morning.

12 MR. RICH: Bruce Rich from Weil, Gotshal representing 13 eBay.

14 THE COURT: Good morning.

15 MR. RICH: If I may, your Honor, introduce at the end 16 of the table Mr. Richter, who is counsel for eBay, who is also 17 a member of the bar of the state and of this court.

18 THE COURT: Good morning.

19 Let's me start with you, Mr. Kalamajka.

20 I'm sorry. I mispronounced your name.

21 MR. KALAMAJKA: That's Kalamajka, your Honor. Thank 22 you.

23 THE COURT: You want a preliminary injunction, and it 24 seems to me what you're asking for is for them not to be able 25 to allow anybody on eBay to sell any purported merchandise of

63T9ROBA

1 your client. I assume there's got to be a less onerous way to 2 solve the problem that you've identified with regard to having 3 some of the merchandise not be valid merchandise of your 4 client.

5 MR. KALAMAJKA: Well, your Honor, that would be if 6 they would have a greater, more vigorous screening of 7 counterfeits. And our client has offered to show them how to 8 do that. They have a hundred percent accurate method of 9 detecting counterfeits. That's why they're constantly forced 10 to screen and report them to eBay.

11 THE COURT: I mean before I hear from them, my first 12 reaction is while the question is at this point: Who should 13 share what part of the burden to have to look at every piece of 14 merchandise and make sure that you're satisfied that it's your 15 client's merchandise.

16 MR. KALAMAJKA: Well, I think that since eBay is the 17 only known source of counterfeiting, as far as our client is 18 able to determine -- in fact, the counterfeiting is going on to 19 this day, despite eBay's, what they call proactive efforts -- 20 our client is forced to maintain a constant vigil. And I think 21 for the short duration of this preliminary injunction it would 22 not harm eBay at all to stop selling LaPore goods if that's the 23 only remedy they can do within their powers, unless they want 24 to adopt better screening methods, which would be very easy for 25 them to do. They have facilities to visually screen, and

63T9ROBA

1 that's all our client really does.

2 THE COURT: Let me ask you this. When you say -- when 3 we -- I didn't get a feel for what the extent of the sale of 4 merchandise was that is really at issue, and what the extent of 5 the counterfeiting is that's at issue.

6 What do you say -- how much merchandise of your client
7 do you say is being sold on eBay, and what percentage or 8 numbers of that merchandise you say is coming up counterfeit?

9 MR. KALAMAJKA: Percentage I'm not sure. But we know
10 of at least 200 counterfeit items since we started complaining 11 to eBay. And I have a declaration here from the employee at 12 eBay whose does the search right now, and she found 40 in the 13 last month; ten just the other day, new ones. These are all 14 new counterfeit --

15 THE COURT: So you say --

16 MR. KALAMAJKA: I'm sorry, your Honor. Go ahead.

17 THE COURT: I was just trying to get the numbers 18 right.

19 Are you saying that so far you've identified about 250 20 counterfeit items?

21 MR. KALAMAJKA: It would be over 200 at this point, 22 yes.

23 THE COURT: And out of how many items that are being 24 sold on eBay of your client?

25 MR. KALAMAJKA: We don't track those because those are

63T9ROBA

1 legitimate.

2 That's part of the problem. Our client has to wade
3 through the legitimate ones to find the counterfeit. The 4 burden is entirely on them to address the problem.

5 THE COURT: The burden can't be entirely on them.
6 Obviously, your client has some interest and some obligation if 7 they don't want counterfeits to be sold to make sure that 8 counterfeits aren't sold.

9 So I can't say that they're only -- that it's only 10 eBay that has a responsibility to make sure that counterfeits
11 of your client don't get into the market.

12 I mean obviously I assume your client has an interest 13 and your client takes vigilant action beyond just suing eBay to 14 try to make sure that counterfeit items aren't sold.

15 MR. KALAMAJKA: Well eBay is the choke point, and we 16 believe that eBay is naturally attracted to international 17 counterfeiters. There is no other evidence of any other 18 counterfeiting on any other website. LaPore does not do any 19 business on the internet. It derives no benefit from eBay's 20 existence. It never learned of counterfeiting -- it learned of 21 it occurring on eBay. And I think eBay, through the knowledge 22 of this clear and consistent pattern of chronic counterfeiting, 23 has a duty because they now, under applicable caselaw, should 24 take extra steps to prevent counterfeiting.

25 THE COURT: Again, when you describe it as a clear and

63T9ROBA

1 consistent pattern of chronic counterfeiting, I don't know what 2 that means. You say you found 200 of how many that are 3 counterfeit? I mean are you saying that it's 200 of thousands?
4 200 of 300? I mean I'm not quite sure what you call chronic 5 counterfeiting.

6 MR. KALAMAJKA: I don't have an exact percentage
7 because many oftentimes, the time periods that authentic goods
8 are offered for sale versus the time periods that counterfeit 9 goods are offered for sale differentiates. So to actually get 10 a percentage over a period of time would require some, I think, 11 playing with numbers that we just haven't got into.

12 THE COURT: I assume your client at least monitors and 13 at least for the purpose of this litigation has some at least 14 estimate of how much of their merchandise is being sold on 15 eBay.

16 MR. KALAMAJKA: They don't maintain those numbers
17 because those are third party sellers.

18 THE COURT: So your client has no idea how much of 19 their merchandise is being sold on eBay? How am I supposed to 20 give them a preliminary injunction -- on what basis could you
21 know that there are 200 counterfeit items being sold on eBay 22 but you have no basis to know how many legitimate items are 23 being sold?

24 MR. KALAMAJKA: It could be determined if we went back 25 and counted all the listings, I suppose. But the fact is

63T9ROBA

1 counterfeiting is an irreparable harm in and of itself. The 2 fact that these items are even listed is an irreparable harm to 3 our client's trademark rights.

4 THE COURT: The issue I'm trying to address is the 5 question is not the irreparable harm. The question is what is 6 a -- whether or not injunctive relief, to the extent that 7 you're asking for the injunctive relief, is the only 8 appropriate remedy to that.

9 Obviously, if there is something that eBay is willing 10 to do and able to do in cooperation with your client to insure 11 that your client can make sure that counterfeits aren't out 12 there, it seems to me that you're not necessarily entitled 13 to -- I mean if I issued an injunction every time somebody
14 said: Well, I found out that eBay is selling -- that on eBay 15 some counterfeit material was sold so therefore, I want you to 16 order that eBay can't sell any of that merchandise, that can 17 shut down everything they sell. And I'm sure that there's some 18 counterfeits in thousands, if not more, of the kinds of 19 merchandise that they sell.

20 To simply have a party say because some of the 21 merchandise sold is counterfeit, that we think that you are to 22 issue an injunction telling them they can't sell any 23 merchandise seems to be -- you have to convince me that that's 24 the appropriate equitable relief at this point in time rather 25 than giving your client some ability and opportunity to make

63T9ROBA

1 sure that the counterfeit stuff that's clearly identified is 2 not sold.

3 Isn't that really what you're entitled to?

4 MR. KALAMAJKA: Well, your Honor, I would argue that 5 no court has set what the numerical limits are of counterfeit 6 versus authentic goods. So in a case like this it's open.

7 Our client is a small manufacturer. They don't have 8 millions of items on the market so that this is just a drop in 9 the bucket. Clearly --

10 THE COURT: That's what I'm trying to get a feel for.

11 MR. KALAMAJKA: I don't think they turn out -- they're 12 a high end couture label. They don't turn out that many goods 13 to begin with. So 200 items is significant to them.

14 THE COURT: 200 of what? That's what I'm trying to 15 figure out.

16 MR. KALAMAJKA: That could probably be determined. We 17 just don't have that figure. We feel that it's irreparable 18 harm the moment the listing occurs. As we speak today, there 19 are counterfeits listings.

20 THE COURT: The injury is not the listing. The injury 21 is the sale.

22 So I'm trying to figure out -- I mean they're are 23 going to be -- people are going to try to sell counterfeits all 24 the time. The question is whether or not once they're 25 identified as counterfeit -- I mean eBay -- I'm not sure you

63T9ROBA

1 can say that eBay has some responsibility before somebody lists
2 an item to make sure that they've screened every single item to 3 make sure that that item is not a counterfeits item.

4 The question is whether or not there are reasonable
5 steps that eBay can take to insure that counterfeit items 6 aren't sold on eBay and that they're not allowing or 7 facilitating the sale of those items.

8 Obviously, once an item is identified as counterfeit 9 and that item is taken off the market for sale, that there is 10 no irreparable injury to your client. Because I'm sure eBay is 11 not the only place that your client has found that counterfeit 12 items are offered for sale.

13 MR. KALAMAJKA: As far as our client knows, eBay is 14 the only site we have had --

15 THE COURT: I didn't say site.

16 MR. KALAMAJKA: Only place in the world where there's 17 counterfeits.

18 THE COURT: Nobody else sells any counterfeit items of 19 your client other than what's being sold on eBay.

20 MR. KALAMAJKA: As far as they know.

21 THE COURT: Well, "as far as they know" doesn't give 22 me a whole lot of confidence that they know.

23 Are you saying they never found any other counterfeit
24 item being sold other than on eBay?

25 MR. KALAMAJKA: I have a declaration here from the

63T9ROBA

1 person that does the searching. They were just on the top five 2 other option sites --

3 THE COURT: I'm not talking about option sites.

4 MR. KALAMAJKA: They have never heard of any 5 counterfeiting in the world.

6 THE COURT: There's never been counterfeiting any 7 place other than on eBay?

8 MR. KALAMAJKA: That is absolutely correct. It's a 9 narrowly tailored relief, we respectfully submit. This is the 10 choke point for the only known counterfeiting.

11 And also, your Honor, if I may be heard, I just would 12 respectfully add that under Hard Rock Cafe and Fonovisa, once a 13 seller or someone who facilitates the selling has suspicion, 14 they have a duty to investigate.

15 We've provided them with the means to investigate.
16 We've offered that to them. They have rejected that. They 17 have not reduced or diminished in any way the number of 18 counterfeits coming on line. They have not adopted --

19 THE COURT: Again, you know, I'm trying to deal with a 20 different issue than you're focusing on.

21 You're saying -- you're focusing on their obligation
22 to prevent counterfeiting from coming on line.

23 I am focusing -- and you can tell me if that's the 24 inappropriate focus -- I'm focusing on whether or not those 25 sales take place.

63T9ROBA

1 I mean they cannot -- I'm not sure that they can ever,
2 100 percent, prevent someone from offering a counterfeit item
3 for sale. Once that item is identified for sale, as being 4 counterfeit, then they clearly have, pursuant to the cases that 5 you just cited, they clearly have a responsibility not to 6 facilitate that sale. And obviously, they facilitate sales by 7 putting buyer and seller together.

8 So, once an item -- I'm trying to understand what -- 9 again, my problem is not whether you're entitled to some sort 10 of relief with regard to protection against counterfeiting.

11 My issue and question is whether or not the kind of 12 relief that you're asking for is the appropriate relief, you 13 know, the reasonable relief other than simply some other 14 reasonable way of, one, identifying counterfeits and making 15 sure they're not sold.

16 MR. KALAMAJKA: Well, the mere listing I think is a 17 form of dilution that is certainly something that harms our 18 mark.

19 In the case of Fonovisa, the defendant was held liable 20 for the sale of goods on its premises where they didn't -- the 21 court didn't need to know that they had had precise notice of 22 those goods' presence. They had prior notice of a general 23 trend of counterfeiting sales.

24 THE COURT: Those are sales.

25 MR. KALAMAJKA: Sales had not occurred. They were

63T9ROBA

1 knew of ongoing infringements, knew of ongoing infringements of 2 the plaintiff's merchandise and did nothing about them.

3 The record here is 100 percent the opposite. There is 4 no evidence that eBay ever knowingly allows listings of 5 counterfeit LaPore merchandise. And each time it has been 6 advised of the fact that there are such claims, they have done
7 exactly what in Fonovisa wasn't done. They've acted vigorously
8 and completely, including suspending forever six sellers found
9 to be engaging in the practice of marketing counterfeit LaPore 10 merchandise on a repeat basis.

11 Final point, your Honor, which is in our briefing, is 12 that, as I'm sure your Honor is aware, while it's fairly easy 13 for a given litigant to come into the court saying it's a,
14 quote, simple matter for eBay to educate itself as to a 15 category of merchandise, to review each and every listing, and 16 to take appropriate steps, indeed to go so far as to wipe out a 17 whole category, the invitation this would provide to thousands 18 of other rights owners, each of whom could conceivably identify 19 one or several instances of counterfeiting out of the universe, 20 and say "me too," I think it's self-evident the impact that 21 would have on the ongoing vitality of eBay's business, and we 22 submit that's an another additional basis upon which the 23 requested preliminary injunction should be denied.

24 Thank you.

25 THE COURT: I have reviewed all of the papers

63T9ROBA

1 thoroughly and considered the arguments made today.

2 I'm going to deny the application for preliminary 3 injunction.

4 I think that reviewing the basic standard or the 5 likelihood of success on the merits and irreparable injury and 6 considering the nature -- the equitable nature of relief of 7 preliminary injunction, I believe that the plaintiff has not 8 made a sufficient showing for a preliminary injunction at this 9 stage of the proceedings, and the nature of the relief that 10 they request.

11 Without making any ultimate determination of whether 12 or not there will be -- plaintiff will be able to establish the 13 merits of its case to some extent, I think on this record that 14 the plaintiff cannot demonstrate a likelihood of success at 15 this stage on the limited issue as it is focused.

16 And the limited issue as it is focused to me at this 17 point that the defendant -- the plaintiff must establish that 18 they can demonstrate that the process that eBay is involved in 19 with regard to responding and intercepting counterfeit goods is 20 inadequate and a further burden to the extent that the 21 plaintiff argues the further burden should be their obligation
22 to independently search and identify counterfeit goods of each 23 manufacturer before those items are offered for sale on eBay by 24 the sellers. At this point on this record, given the process
25 that they are already involved in, which is -- can be described

63T9ROBA

1 at a reasonable process, of giving the manufacturers an 2 opportunity to immediately identify counterfeit goods for -- 3 that are being offered for sale and responding in a reasonable 4 period of time to that identification in order to prevent that 5 sale, I think that the plaintiff cannot demonstrate at this 6 stage of the proceeding that that -- on this record -- that 7 that is an unreasonable, inadequate process, and that minimally
8 the process should be that they should, as I say, independently 9 search and identify counterfeit goods of every manufacturer on 10 their own without any -- a lot of great involvement by the 11 manufacturer and if they didn't -- if they do not do so, that 12 that in and of itself would constitute a basis for this court 13 to enter injunctive relief to prevent all sales by sellers of 14 both legitimate and illegitimate counterfeit merchandise on the 15 eBay site.

16 I believe that that -- given the equitable nature of 17 the relief requested, I do not believe that that is a 18 reasonable equitable remedy, temporary remedy at this point and 19 I do not believe that the record demonstrates that the greater 20 burden is minimally the burden that should be placed -- an 21 obligation that should be placed on eBay as opposed to a 22 determination with regard to whether or not the process that 23 already exists is adequate.

24 Also, I don't think the plaintiff has met its burden
25 with regard to irreparable injury in this case. There is a

63T9ROBA

1 process -- and this court determines at this stage of the 2 proceeding it appears to be a reasonable process -- for the 3 plaintiff and any manufacturer to identify, intercept and have 4 eBay prevent the sale of counterfeit merchandise in a timely 5 manner; that although that process as it exists during this 6 litigation may put some additional burdens on the plaintiff; 7 one, the plaintiff has not demonstrated that the burden that 8 that places on the plaintiff at this point has been inadequate 9 to intercept, if not all, the overwhelming majority of 10 counterfeit goods; and two, even if that burden at this stage 11 during this proceeding would add additional costs to the 12 plaintiff to vigorously monitor the sale of counterfeit goods, 13 those costs can be identified in dollars and can be compensated
14 in damages if the plaintiff is successful in this litigation.
15 And so therefore, it is something that is quantifiable in terms
16 of its expense and compensable in damages if plaintiff prevails 17 in this lawsuit.

18 So, based on the record presented before me and in my 19 consideration of the papers submitted and the arguments made
20 today, I'm going to deny the motion for preliminary injunctive
21 relief based on the record that's been made in this case 22 through the submissions and today's proceeding based on the 23 reasons that I've indicated on the record.

24 I will obviously allow the parties to expedite this 25 proceeding to resolve these issues to the extent that that's

63T9ROBA

1 reasonable.

2 Also, to the extent that the parties can independently 3 or jointly propose some other reasonable conditions under which 4 this case should proceed or which would make it less burdensome
5 on the plaintiff to insure that during the pendency of this 6 proceeding that counterfeit goods are not sold on eBay without 7 simply shifting the burden from one party to the other an order 8 to consider anything that the parties can jointly agree upon or 9 that can be suggested by either party with regard to what might 10 minimize or insure that during the pendency of this litigation 11 that counterfeit goods are not sold on eBay. But it seems to 12 me that the process that is in place at eBay -- although it
13 puts a slightly greater burden on the plaintiff to monitor -- 14 in the meantime, during the pendency of this litigation, the 15 proposed sale of counterfeit goods to a greater extent than the 16 plaintiff wishes to take on that burden, I think that that 17 process appears to be adequate to insure that if it is 18 utilized, that counterfeit goods would not be sold on eBay or 19 to the extent that they are would be minimal. And to the 20 extent that there is a greater expense and effort on the part 21 of the plaintiff to utilize this process, that it can itemize 22 those expenses and be compensated for them if they ultimately 23 prevail.

24 So, I will deny the motion for preliminary injunctive 25 relief.

63T9ROBA

1 How do you want to proceed, Mr. Kalamajka, with regard
2 to this case at this point?

3 MR. KALAMAJKA: I would have to discuss that with my 4 client, your Honor.

5 THE COURT: Okay. Why don't you -- I think I may 6 have -- I don't know because it came under a preliminary 7 injunction, I don't know if I sent you a proposed case 8 management plan.

9 MR. YELLEN: No, your Honor, you didn't. And what I 10 would suggest is we will confer a while and we'll submit our 11 case management plan. And I think I heard you say we can do 12 this on an expedited basis.

13 THE COURT: To the extent that you can agree to do
14 that, yes.

15 To the extent that you want to do that and disagree, 16 tell me what you would independently propose and tell me why 17 that's reasonable or not reasonable, and then I will put it on 18 whatever reasonable expedited schedule that you propose in 19 order to resolve this as quickly as possible.

20 MR. RICH: Thank you, your Honor.

21 MR. KALAMAJKA: Thank you, your Honor.

22 THE COURT: I'll wait to hear from you.

26 BACKGROUND

27 eBay provides an Internet website service where over 25 million buyers and 28 sellers of consumer goods and services have come together to buy and sell items

1 through either an auction or a fixed-price format. eBay's web site allows sellers to 2 post listings containing descriptions of items they wish to offer for sale; and it
3 allows buyers to bid for items they wish to buy. People looking to buy items can 4 either browse through eBay's 4,700 categories of goods and services or search for 5 items by typing words into eBay's search engine. Every day, eBay users place on 6 average over one million new listings on eBay's web site. At any given time, 7 there are over six million listings on the web site.

8 eBay has limited involvement in the sale transactions. At the end of the 9 bidding period, eBay's system automatically sends the high bidder and seller an e-10 email identifying each other as such. Thereafter, buyers and sellers deal directly 11 with each other to finalize the transaction. eBay has no knowledge of whether a 12 sale is actually completed. If an item is sold, it passes from the seller directly to 13 the buyer without eBay's involvement.

14 On or about December 20, 2000, eBay received a "cease and desist" letter
15 dated December 14, 2000 from Plaintiff Robert Hendrickson. The letter advised 16 eBay that Plaintiff dba Tobann International Pictures is the copyright owner of the 17 documentary "Manson." The letter also stated that pirated copies of "Manson" in 18 digital video disk ("DVD") format were being offered for sale on eBay. However, 19 the letter did not explain which copies of "Manson" in DVD format were 20 infringing copies; nor did it identify Plaintiff's copyright interest. The letter 21 demanded that eBay cease and desist "from any and all further conduct considered 22 an infringement(s) of [Plaintiff's] right" or else face prosecution "to the fullest
23 extend provided by law." (Richter Decl., Ex. C.)

24 After receiving this letter, eBay sent Plaintiff e-mails asking for more 25 detailed information concerning Plaintiff's copyright and the alleged infringing 26 items. eBay advised Plaintiff that he needed to submit proper notice under the 27 Digital Millennium Copyright Act ("DMCA"). eBay explained that proper notice 28 included, among other things, the identification of the unauthorized copies by the

1 exact item numbers and a statement under penalty of perjury that Plaintiff owns 2 the copyright to "Manson." eBay also encouraged Plaintiff to join its Verified
3 Rights Owner ("VeRO") program and asked Plaintiff to fill out and submit eBay's 4 Notice of Infringement form.

5 Plaintiff refused to join eBay's VeRO program and refused to fill out
6 eBay's Notice of Infringement form. At some point, Plaintiff sent eBay the names
7 of a few eBay sellers who were selling counterfeit copies of "Manson." However, 8 he never gave eBay the specific item numbers that eBay sought.

9 On January 17, 2001, Plaintiff filed the first of three lawsuits against eBay.
10 In CV 01-0495 ("Case No. 1"), Plaintiff sued eBay and two eBay sellers 11 ("Luckyboy" and "Reilly"), asserting a claim for copyright infringement. The 12 Complaint in Case No. 1 alleges, among other things, that eBay is liable for the 13 sale of unauthorized copies of the film "Manson" by users on eBay's web site.

14 On February 12, 2001, Plaintiff filed the second lawsuit. In CV 01-1371
15 ("Case No. 2"), Plaintiff sued eBay, David Durham (another third party seller) and 16 Margaret C. Whitman ("Whitman"), eBay's President and CEO. In this action, 17 Plaintiff alleges that eBay and Whitman are liable for copyright infringement
18 because they allowed Defendant Durham to sell unauthorized copies of the film 19 "Manson" on or after January 17, 2001, the date Plaintiff filed Case No. 1.

20 On April 13, 2001, Plaintiff filed his third lawsuit against eBay. In CV 01-
21 3412 ("Case No. 3"), Plaintiff added several other defendants, including eBay's
22 Senior Intellectual Property Counsel, Michael Richter ("Richter"). Plaintiff
23 alleges, among other things, that eBay and Richter are liable for copyright 24 infringement because they wrongfully continued to allow the sale of unauthorized 25 copies of the film "Manson" by eBay users after February 25, 2001, the date 26 Plaintiff commenced Case No. 2. In addition, Plaintiff asserts against eBay and 27 Richter a Lanham Act claim and a state claim for tortious interference with 28 prospective economic advantage.

1 On March 19, 2001, Plaintiff filed a motion for preliminary injunction in 2 Case No. 1. On April 30, 2001, the Court denied Plaintiff's motion. The Court
3 signed eBay's proposed order denying the motion for preliminary injunction. The 4 order states, in pertinent part:

5 Based on the Court's review of the evidence submitted by the parties 6 in connection with this motion, the Court finds that eBay's alleged 7 conduct is governed by the safe harbor provision of the [DMCA] (17 8 U.S.C. § 152, et seq.). eBay is an online service provider, as defined 9 under 17 U.S.C. § 512(k)(1)(B), and qualifies for protection from 10 liability under Section 512(c) of the DMCA. The Court further finds 11 that Hendrickson failed to provide eBay with effective notification of 12 claimed infringement under Section 512(c)(3) of the DMCA.

13 May 7, 2001 Order at 2 (emphasis added).

14 On April 30, 2001, the Court also granted eBay's motion to consolidate the 15 three actions for all purposes. On May 31, 2001, the eBay Defendants filed the 16 present motion for summary judgment.¹ On June 11, 2001, Plaintiff filed an 17 opposition. On June 18, 2001, the eBay Defendants filed their reply. On June 25, 18 2001, the Court took the Motion under submission.

19 DISCUSSION

20 I. PLAINTIFF'S REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL DISCOVERY

21 Throughout the Opposition, Plaintiff contends that the Court should decline 22 to decide the Motion until he has taken additional discovery. He complains that 23 he has not taken depositions, particularly the deposition of Richter. Nowhere in 24 the Opposition does Plaintiff ask the Court to deny the motion or continue the 25

26 ¹ For purposes of the Motion, the eBay Defendants do not challenge
27 Plaintiff's claim that (1) he holds the copyright to the film "Manson"; (2) he has a 28 protectable trade dress; or (3) third party sellers infringed Plaintiff's copyright or trade dress.

1 hearing pursuant to Rule 56(f) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Nor does 2 Plaintiff's declaration make a showing as to why he "cannot for reasons stated
3 present by affidavit facts essential to justify [his] opposition." Fed. R. Civ. P.
4 56(f).

5 Instead, Plaintiff requests that the Court allow him to cross-examine Richter 6 pursuant to Local Rule 7.5.4. He states that a cross-examination of Richter on 7 matters relating to the contents of his supporting declaration would demonstrate 8 that genuine issues of material facts exist. He also states that he will "waive any 9 and all objections[] regarding . . . the lack of discovery" if the Court will permit
10 the cross-examination of Richter. (Opp. at 19.) Plaintiff warns that the parties
11 "should be prepared for a mini-trial on June 25, 2001." (Opp. at 19.)

12 Cross-examination of a declarant may be permitted when "an issue of fact is 13 to be determined." Local Rule 7.5.4. On June 19, 2001, the Court issued a 14 minute order denying Plaintiff's request to cross-examine Richter under Local 15 Rule 7.5.4 on the ground that a motion for summary judgment is not a motion 16 where an issue of fact is to be determined.

17 The Court may construe Plaintiff's request for additional discovery as a 18 Rule 56(f) request for a denial or continuance of the Motion. However, a request
19 under Rule 56(f) must be supported by an affidavit that explains why the party 20 needs additional discovery and how the additional discovery will likely create a 21 genuine issue of material fact. Stearns Airport Equip. Co. v. FMC Corp., 170 F.3d 22 518, 535 (5th Cir. 1999); see Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(f). Plaintiff did not submit such 23 an affidavit. Even if the Court allows Plaintiff to make his showing through his 24 brief instead of a declaration under oath, Plaintiff has not demonstrated that he is 25 entitled to relief.

26 First, Plaintiff has failed to identify any specific fact that he believes he 27 could obtain from discovery that will likely create a genuine issue for trial.
28 Second, he has failed to explain his lack of diligence in seeking discovery. It

1 appears that he believes the deposition of a single witness -- Richter -- would be 2 sufficient discovery for purposes of defeating the Motion. However, Plaintiff 3 could have taken Richter's deposition long ago. The record shows Richter was 4 one of Plaintiff's contacts at eBay before Case No.1 was filed in January 2001. In 5 addition, in March 2001, eBay identified Richter as one of its ten witnesses in its 6 initial Rule 26 disclosures (Case No. 1). Moreover, Richter's declaration in 7 support of the Motion is almost identical to the declaration he submitted in April 8 2001 in opposition to Plaintiff's motion for preliminary injunction. Nevertheless, 9 it appears that Plaintiff has taken no steps to notice Richter's deposition.
10 Therefore, Plaintiff is not entitled to additional discovery before the Court reach 11 the merits of the Motion.

12 II. SUMMARY JUDGMENT

13 A. Standard

14 Summary judgment is proper if "the pleadings, depositions, answers to 15 interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show 16 that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is 17 entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). A fact is material 18 only if it is relevant to a claim or defense and its existence might affect the suit's
19 outcome. See T.W. Elec. Serv., Inc. v. Pacific Elec. Contractors Assoc., 809 F.2d 20 626, 630 (9th Cir. 1987). A court may not, on a motion for summary judgment, 21 evaluate the credibility of the evidence submitted by the parties. See Leslie v.
22 Grupo ICA, 198 F.3d 1152, 1157-59 (9th Cir. 1999).

23 The moving party bears the burden of demonstrating the absence of a 24 genuine issue of material fact for trial. See Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 25 U.S. 242, 256 (1986). "[T]he burden on the moving party may be discharged by 26 'showing' — that is, pointing out to the district court — that there is an absence of 27 evidence to support the nonmoving party's case." Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 28 U.S. 317, 325 (1986); see Musick v. Burke, 913 F.2d 1390, 1394 (9th Cir. 1990).

1 To demonstrate that the non-moving party lacks sufficient evidence to entitle it to 2 judgment, the moving party must affirmatively show the absence of such evidence 3 in the record, either by deposition testimony, the inadequacy of documentary 4 evidence or by any other form of admissible evidence. See Celotex, 477 U.S. at 5 322. The moving party has no burden to negate or disprove matters on which the 6 opponent will have the burden of proof at trial. See id. at 325.

7 A non-moving party's allegation that factual disputes persist between the 8 parties will not automatically defeat an otherwise properly supported motion for 9 summary judgment. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e) (non-moving party "may not rest 10 upon the mere allegations or denials of the adverse party's pleadings, but . . . must 11 set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial."). "[A] mere 12 'scintilla' of evidence will be insufficient to defeat a properly supported motion 13 for summary judgment; instead, the nonmoving party must introduce some 14 'significant probative evidence tending to support the complaint.'" Fazio v. City
15 and County of San Francisco, 125 F.3d 1328, 1331 (9th Cir. 1997), quoting 16 Anderson, 477 U.S. at 249, 252. If the adverse party does not so respond, 17 summary judgment, if appropriate, shall be entered against the adverse party.

18 In judging evidence at the summary judgment stage, courts must draw all 19 reasonable inferences in favor of the party against whom summary judgment is 20 sought. See Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587
21 (1986); Chaffin v. United States, 176 F.3d 1208, 1213 (9th Cir. 1999). However, 22 if no factual showing is made in opposition to a motion for summary judgment, 23 the district court is not required to search the record sua sponte for some genuine 24 issue of material fact. It may rely entirely on the evidence designated by the 25 moving party showing that no such triable issue exists. See Guarino v. Brookfield 26 Township Trustees, 980 F.2d 399, 403 (6th Cir. 1992). While "there is some room 27 for debate as to how 'specific' must be the 'specific facts' that Rule 56(e) requires 28 in a particular case," a nonmovant cannot defeat a Rule 56 motion by merely

1 “replac[ing] conclusory allegations of the complaint . . . with conclusory
2 allegations of an affidavit.” Lujan v. National Wildlife Fed’n, 497 U.S. 871, 889 3 (1990).

4 B. Plaintiff’s Copyright Infringement Claim

5 1. eBay’s Entitlement to Immunity Under the DMCA

6 eBay argues that Plaintiff cannot prevail on his copyright claim against it as 7 a matter of law because the Court has already determined that eBay is immune 8 from liability under the DMCA. eBay refers to the Court’s order denying 9 Plaintiff’s motion for preliminary injunction and contends, without any supporting 10 authority, that the Court’s ruling that eBay is entitled to qualified immunity at that 11 stage is dispositive on summary judgment. According to eBay, the Court’s prior 12 ruling forecloses Plaintiff from raising any genuine issue of material fact to 13 maintain a viable copyright claim against eBay. eBay’s “law of the case” 14 argument has no merit.

15 The Ninth Circuit “ha[s] not departed from the general rule that a decision 16 on a preliminary injunction does not constitute the law of the case and the parties
17 are free to litigate the merits.” City of Anaheim, Cal. v. Duncan, 658 F.2d 1326, 18 1328 n.2 (9th Cir. 1981); accord Golden State Transit Corp. v. City of Los 19 Angeles, 754 F.2d 830, 832 n. 3 (9th Cir. 1985), rev’d on other grounds, 475 U.S.
20 608 (1986); see also Wilcox v. United States, 888 F.2d 1111, 1113-14 (6th Cir.
21 1989) (“Because of the lesser burden of proof required to support a motion for 22 preliminary injunction as contrasted with a motion for summary judgment, a trial 23 court’s disposition of the substantive issues joined on a motion for extraordinary 24 relief is not dispositive of those substantive issues on the merits”). The Court’s 25 findings and conclusions in connection with its denial of the preliminary 26 injunction only demonstrate that the record before the Court at the time showed 27 that eBay was covered by the DMCA’s safe harbor provision. The Court did not 28 determine, under the summary judgment standard, whether the undisputed facts

1 show the absence of genuine issues for trial. Nor was the Court required at the 2 preliminary injunction stage to view the facts and draw inferences in the light
3 most favorable to Plaintiff.

4 Moreover, the motion for preliminary injunction only concerned the record
5 in Case No. 1. It appears that these consolidated cases involve slightly different 6 facts over slightly different time frames. To the extent that any of the differences 7 concern facts material to eBay's defense, eBay needs to address these differences.
8 For example, to prevail on summary judgment, eBay has the burden of showing 9 there is no triable issue of fact on its claim that it has met each of the requirements
10 for immunity under the DMCA. See 17 U.S.C. § 512(c); see also ALS Scan, Inc.
11 v. RemarQ Communities, Inc., 239 F.3d 619, 625 (4th Cir. 2001) (Noting that the 12 immunity under the DMCA is "granted only to 'innocent' service providers who 13 can prove they do not have actual or constructive knowledge of the 14 infringement"). On the issue of proper notification, eBay's Uncontroverted Fact 15 No. 8 states that "Prior to filing this action, Hendrickson never provided eBay 16 with sufficient information to enable eBay to determine which copies of 'Manson'
17 were infringing copies and which were not." (eBay's Statement of Facts, No. 8 18 (emphasis added).) eBay does not explain which "action" it meant to reference -- 19 Case No. 1, Case No. 2 or all three cases. To the extent that Plaintiff attempted to 20 provided some notice over different periods, even if Plaintiff's purported methods 21 of notification are deficient under the DMCA, eBay's uncontroverted facts should 22 identify more clearly what occurred when.²

24 ² The Court notes that eBay's evidence is incomplete. For example, 25 eBay relies on admissions made by Plaintiff in response to requests for 26 admissions. (See, e.g., Kim Decl., Exs. F & G.) Some of the admissions concern 27 documents originally attached to eBay's First Set of Requests for Admissions.
28 (See Kim Decl., Exs. F at 2-3 [definitions].) However, none of the referenced documents are attached to these exhibits.

1 At this time, eBay carries the initial burden of establishing its entitlement to 2 the immunity defense. eBay failed to carry that burden because it relied on the 3 success of its law of the case argument. Because the record suggests that eBay can 4 make a sufficient showing that it is entitled to immunity, the Court denies the 5 motion for summary judgment of the copyright claim without prejudice to its re-6 filing.

7 2. Richter and Whitman's Liability for Copyright
8 Infringement

9 Richter and Whitman are sued in their capacity as employees of eBay.
10 Richter and Whitman argue, among other things, that they cannot be held 11 vicariously liable for copyright infringement where eBay is not liable for 12 infringement under the DMCA. The Court's determination of eBay's immunity 13 defense may dispose of this issue. Instead of addressing the copyright claim 14 piecemeal, the Court declines to address Richter and Whitman's motion at this 15 time.

16 C. Plaintiff's Lanham Act Claim Against eBay and Richter

17 In Case No. 3, Plaintiff alleges that eBay, Richter and over a dozen third 18 party sellers violated his rights under the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125. In the 19 Motion, eBay and Richter complain that the conclusory allegations in the 20 Complaint make it difficult for them to ascertain whether the Lanham Act claims 21 against them are based on vicarious or contributory infringement principles.
22 Therefore, they address both theories of secondary liability on summary judgment, 23 arguing that the undisputed facts show Plaintiff cannot prevail under either theory 24 as a matter of law.³

26 ³ Vicarious liability under the Lanham Act requires that "the defendant 27 and the infringer have an apparent or actual partnership, have authority to bind one 28 another in transactions with third parties or exercise joint ownership or control

1 eBay and Richter's reliance on the contributory and vicarious liability tests
2 is misplaced. Plaintiff is pursuing "printer-publisher" liability for trademark/trade
3 dress infringement. See Case No. 3 Complaint, ¶¶ 13, 38-39, 86; Opp. at 15; see 4 also 4 McCarthy on Trademarks, § 25:19 (2000) ("liability is imposed on one who 5 'reproduces or imitates' the trademark on materials (such as labels or 6 advertisements) that are used by a seller in an infringing manner"); Conopco, Inc.
7 v. Rosa Distributors, 967 F. Supp. 1068 (N.D. Ill. 1997) (infringement action 8 against printer of allegedly infringing labels for fabric softener); Century 21 Real 9 Estate Corp. v. R.M. Post, Inc., 8 U.S.P.Q.2d 1614 (N.D. Ill. 1988) (infringement 10 action against publishers of a telephone directory yellow pages advertisement 11 which allegedly contained an unauthorized reference to the "Century 21" mark); 12 see also Polo Fashions, Inc. v. Ontario Printers, Inc., 601 F. Supp. 402 (N.D. Ohio 13 1984) (owner of trademark brought commercial counterfeiting action against 14 printer); cf. Lockheed Martin Corp. v. Network Solutions, Inc., 985 F. Supp. 949, 15 958 (C.D. Cal. 1997), affirmed, 28 F.3d 769 (9th Cir. 1994) (suggesting that an 16 Internet service provider that provides hosts computers for web sites may be held 17 liable for printer-publisher liability under the Lanham Act). Printer-publisher 18 liability is imposed on one who reproduces or publishes an advertisement used by 19 a seller in an infringing manner.

20
22 over the infringing product." Hard Rock Cafe Licensing Corp., 955 F.2d 1143, 23 1150 (7th Cir. 1992). In contrast, contributory liability under the Lanham Act 24 generally requires that the plaintiff show the defendant "(1) intentionally 25 induce[d] another to infringe on a trademark or (2) continue[d] to supply a product 26 knowing that the recipient is using the product to engage in trademark 27 infringement." Fonovisa, Inc. v. Cherry Auction, Inc., 76 F.3d 259, 264-65 (9th 28 Cir. 1996); accord 4 McCarthy on Trademarks, § 25:17 (2000) ("Liability for trademark infringement . . . may be extended beyond those who actually sell goods with the infringing mark, to include all those contributory infringers who knowingly cooperate in illegal and tortious activity").

1 Although the Motion cites no authority addressing the printer-publisher
2 liability doctrine, eBay and Richter are aware of the doctrine. In the Motion, they 3 raise an alternative argument for judgment in their favor on the Lanham Act claim.
4 They cite 15 U.S.C. § 1114(2), which limits a plaintiff's remedy to an injunction 5 against the future presentation of the infringing advertisement if the infringer is an 6 "innocent" printer or publisher. See 15 U.S.C. § 1114(2)(B).

7 eBay and Richter argue that Plaintiff's Lanham Act claim is barred as a 8 matter of law because (1) they qualify as innocent infringers and (2) Plaintiff seeks 9 remedies that are not available to him.⁴ eBay and Richter submit Richter's 10 declaration, which states that "eBay and I had no knowledge of any alleged 11 Lanham Act violations relating to Hendrickson and/or 'Manson' until 12 Hendrickson filed his complaint in Case No. 3" because Plaintiff "never advised 13 eBay or any of eBay's employees . . . of any alleged violation of the Lanham Act" 14 before filing suit. (Richter Decl., ¶ 27). eBay and Richter, citing no authority to 15 guide the Court, contend that this evidence sufficiently establishes their 16 "innocence."

17 15 U.S.C. § 1114(2) provides, in pertinent part:

18 Notwithstanding any other provision of this chapter, the remedies
19 given to the owner of a right infringed under this chapter or to a 20 person bringing an action under section 1125(a) of this title shall be 21 limited as follows:

22

24 ⁴ The prayer in the Complaint shows Plaintiff seeks remedies well
25 beyond what is allowable under Section 1114(2). (See Case No. 3 Complaint, ¶ 26 92 (asking for treble damages and "a permanent injunction enjoining each of the 27 Defendants from engaging in, or facilitating others in the making, false packaging, 28 Plaintiff's motion picture entitled 'Manson'").)

1 (B) Where the infringement or violation complained of is contained 2 in or is part of paid advertising matter in a newspaper, magazine . . .
3 or in an electronic communication as defined in section 2510(12) of 4 Title 18, the remedies of the owner of the right infringed . . . shall be 5 limited to an injunction against the presentation [in] such newspapers, 6 magazines . . . or in future transmissions of such electronic 7 communications. The limitations of this subparagraph shall apply 8 only to innocent infringers and innocent violators.

9 15 U.S.C. § 1114(2) (emphasis added). A posting on eBay's web site is an 10 "electronic communication" as defined by Section 2510(12). See 18 U.S.C. § 11 2510(12) (defining "electronic communication" as "any transfer of signs, signals, 12 writing, images, data or intelligence of any nature transmitted . . . by a wire, radio, 13 electromagnetic, photoelectronic or photooptical system that affects interstate or 14 foreign commerce"); Gucci America, Inc. v. Hall & Assoc., 135 F. Supp. 2d 409, 15 419 n.20 (S.D.N.Y. 2001) (finding the definition of "electronic communication" 16 applies to typical commercial Internet websites).

17 The Lanham Act does not define the test for "innocent infringer." Few 18 published cases address the standard for determining whether a printer-publisher
19 constitutes an innocent infringer under Section 1114(2). None of those cases 20 involve an Internet service provider such as eBay.

21 In Polo Fashions v. Ontario Printers, 601 F. Supp. 402 (N.D. Ohio 1984), 22 the court articulated an "objectively reasonable business person" test for innocent 23 infringer:

24 When a person, such as a manufacturer or a printer, is approached to 25 make a product for a famous manufacturer, that business person has 26 an affirmative duty to determine the legitimacy of the person placing 27 the order. That person must make reasonable inquiry, and this will be 28 determined from all of the facts and circumstances.

1 Id. at 403.

2 In 1989, Congress amended the innocent printer provision. It “expanded 3 the category of innocent printers and publishers to include broadcasters [of 4 electronic media] that carry advertisements [containing] infringing trademarks”
5 and extended the limitation on remedies. 4 McCarthy on Trademarks, § 25:29 6 (2000). Legislative history indicates that the term “innocent” is intended to 7 incorporate the constitutional standard of “actual malice” applicable in defamation 8 cases such as New York Times v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254 (1964). See id.

9 However, the defamation test is not easily transferred to the state of 10 mind of a publisher or broadcaster. This would mean that such a 11 publisher or broadcaster is not ‘innocent’ only if it knew that the 12 advertisement was false or infringing or proceeded to publish the 13 advertisement with “reckless disregard” as to whether it was false or 14 infringing or not.

15 Id. McCarthy on Trademarks further notes that Polo Fashions’s “affirmative 16 duty” to investigate standard “cannot be applied after the 1989 changes to the 17 Lanham Act.” Id.

18 The only published case after the 1989 amendment is Conopco, Inc. v. Rosa 19 Distributors, 967 F. Supp. 1068 (N.D. Ill. 1997). In this case, the plaintiff sued 20 the printer of infringing labels for a fabric softener. The record showed that the 21 defendant’s employees admitted they were familiar with the famous “Snuggle” 22 fabric softener trademark and trade dress when they printed labels for a fabric 23 softener called “Nuggle.” 967 F. Supp. at 1071. The “Nuggle” labels were 24 substantially similar to “Snuggle” labels. Id. Without discussing the legislative 25 history of the amendment to 15 U.S.C. § 1114(2), the court applied an “objectively
26 reasonable” test on summary judgment similar to the one articulated in Polo 27 Fashions. “While a printer may not always be required to investigate a customer’s 28 authorization to print product labels, whether [the defendant’s] conduct here was

1 objectively reasonable is a disputed issue of fact.” Id. The test is whether the 2 infringer’s conduct was objectively reasonable at the time it printed the infringing 3 material. Id.

4 “Given the legislative history and the stringent requirements under the 5 actual malice standard, it is doubtful that the objectively reasonable standard 6 [adopted by Polo Fashions and Conopco] is the appropriate standard. NBA
7 Properties v. Entertainment Records LLC, 1999 WL 335147, *15 (S.D.N.Y. May 8 26, 1999). The Court need not decide which test applies. Under either standard, 9 the undisputed facts show eBay is an “innocent infringer”

10 If the objectively reasonable standard applies, the test should not be whether 11 eBay acted like a reasonable traditional printer/publisher, but whether eBay acted 12 like a reasonable Internet service provider. In applying this test, the Court takes 13 into account the following: (1) the vast amount of information posted on eBay’s 14 web site on a daily basis; (2) the difficulties involved in monitoring all the 15 postings to determine whether intellectual property rights of third parties have 16 been infringed by other third parties; (3) no law currently imposes an affirmative 17 duty on companies such as eBay to engage in such monitoring; and (4) 18 congressional actions in recent years (in the copyright arena) reflect an intent to 19 encourage Internet service providers and rights owners to cooperate and detect 20 infringements and protect an Internet service provider from suit when it lacks 21 notice of infringing activity. See, e.g., eBay’s Appendix of Authorities in Opp. to 22 Motion to Preliminary Injunction, Ex. C (Senate Report 105-190 at 40-41 (105th 23 Congress, 2d Session 1998) (on the passage of the DMCA).

24 The undisputed facts show that eBay’s Internet auction web site allows 25 buyers and sellers to deal with each other freely with minimal contact from eBay.
26 Unlike the traditional printer/publishers at issue in Polo Fashions or Conopco, 27 eBay does not actually create the infringing “product” or advertisement. eBay 28 does not create, review, approve or edit the content of any advertisement provided

1 by the millions of sellers who use eBay's web site. (Richter Decl., ¶ 4.) The 2 sellers create their own electronic classified advertisement and transmit them to 3 eBay's host computer server. (Id. at ¶¶ 2-4.) As long as sellers pay the required 4 fees, sellers may post their listings at any time without intervention by eBay.
5 (See id.) Every day, over one million new listings are "published" on eBay's web 6 site. (Id. at ¶ 2.) Under the circumstances, a company such as eBay cannot be 7 expected to investigate the legitimacy of any particular advertisement published 8 on its web site unless it has notice of a potential trade dress infringement (e.g., 9 someone alerts eBay of such infringement).

10 The record shows that Plaintiff first advised eBay of alleged Lanham Act 11 violations in April 2001 around the time he filed the complaint in Case No. 3.
12 Plaintiff began complaining to eBay in December 2000. During the next three or 13 four months, Plaintiff exchanged numerous communications with eBay and filed 14 two lawsuits against eBay. All of Plaintiff's complaints concerned claims of 15 copyright violation.

16 In April 2001, Plaintiff advised eBay for the first time that he owns a 17 famous trade dress. By a letter dated April 8, 2001, Plaintiff informed eBay that 18 eBay sellers' "Manson" DVD advertisements contain "trade dress that is 19 confusingly similar to the official trade dress of my now famous VHS 'MANSON' 20 trade dress." (Opp., Ex. F.) Enclosed with the letter were (1) a copy of an 21 advertisement from eBay's web site displaying an official "Manson" videocassette 22 with the alleged famous trade dress and (2) a copy of two eBay sellers' listings of 23 counterfeit "Manson" DVDs displaying packaging that looks similar to the 24 packaging for the authorized "Manson" videocassette. (See id.) Plaintiff mailed 25 that letter on April 9, 2001. (Id.) It is unclear when eBay received the letter.
26 However, it is clear that Plaintiff filed Case No. 3 just four days after mailing the 27 letter. eBay never had an opportunity to address Plaintiff's trade dress complaint 28 before it was slapped with a lawsuit.

1 Based on this record, eBay's failure to delist any of the allegedly infringing 2 advertisements before Plaintiff served eBay with the Case No. 3 Complaint was 3 objectively reasonable. Plaintiff submits no evidence that shows eBay allowed the 4 "publication" of the advertisements when it knew or should have known that 5 Plaintiff owned an allegedly famous trade dress and third party sellers violated his 6 trade dress rights.

7 If the actual malice test applies, Plaintiff would have to prove that eBay 8 acted either (1) with knowledge that the advertisements identified in the 9 Complaint infringed Plaintiff's Lanham Act rights or (2) with reckless disregard as 10 to whether those advertisements infringed Plaintiff's rights. Plaintiff clearly has 11 no evidence that even suggests eBay actually knew that the complained of 12 advertisements were infringing on his trade dress and either "allowed" their 13 publication or refused to delist the advertisements with reckless disregard for 14 Plaintiff's rights.

15 Accordingly, even if Plaintiff were to establish infringement, the undisputed 16 facts show eBay would be an innocent infringer within the meaning of 15 U.S.C.
17 § 1114(2). Because Richter's role in this lawsuit is based solely on his actions or 18 inactions as an employee and agent of eBay, the Court holds that eBay's "innocent 19 infringer" status extends to Richter. Consequently, Plaintiff is not entitled to the 20 remedies that he seeks to recover from eBay and Richter under the Lanham Act.

21 Nevertheless, eBay and Richter are not entitled to judgment on the Lanham 22 Act claim simply because Plaintiff is not entitled to all the remedies that he seeks.
23 If Plaintiff prevails on his claim that eBay "published" infringing material, 24 Plaintiff would be entitled to some relief, namely, an injunction against the 25 presentation of the misleading advertisements in future eBay listings. The Court
26 hereby construes this portion of the Motion to include a motion for summary 27 adjudication on the issue of the applicability of the "innocent infringer" provision.
28 The Court concludes that eBay and Richter are entitled to summary adjudication

1 in their favor on this issue.

2 D. Plaintiff's State Claim for Tortious Interference with Prospective
3 Economic Advantage Against eBay and Richter

4 In Case No. 3, Plaintiff alleges a state claim for intentional interference with 5 prospective economic advantage. eBay and Richter content that summary 6 judgment is proper for two reasons. First, they argue that Plaintiff's state claim is 7 preempted by the Copyright Act. Second, they argue that the Communications 8 Decency Act ("DCA") creates a federal immunity to any state law claim that 9 would hold eBay or its employee liable for the listings posted on its web site by 10 third parties. Because the Court holds that Plaintiff's tortious interference claim is 11 preempted by the Copyright Act, the Court need not reach the second argument.

12 Under the Copyright Act, all rights under state law are preempted if they (1)
13 come within the "subject matter of copyright" as defined in Sections 102 and 103 14 and (2) are "equivalent to any of the exclusive rights within the general scope of 15 copyright" as defined in Section 106 of the Act. 17 U.S.C. § 301. Plaintiff's 16 interference with business advantage claim is based on all of "[t]he 17 aforementioned acts of allowing the infringing activity complained of continue."
18 (Case No. 3 Complaint, ¶ 87 (emphasis added).) All references in the Complaint 19 to eBay and Richter's "continued" violation of Plaintiff's rights relate to his 20 copyright infringement claims. (E.g., id. at ¶ 36 (the "continued Copyright 21 Infringement activities"), ¶ 75 (alleging that he filed Case No. 1 because the 22 copyright violations "continued" and "it became apparent that neither EBAY, nor 23 MICHAEL RICHTER would do anything to stop the subject infringing activity") 24 and ¶¶ 75-78 (Richter "willfully and callously allowed and directed others to 25 allow such activity to continue to interfere with Plaintiff's rightful business 26 opportunities" after Plaintiff filed the first copyright infringement lawsuit against 27 eBay). Indeed, Plaintiff's tortious interference claim is based on the same 28 allegations of infringement of his rights under the Copyright Act -- the continued

1 unauthorized distribution of Plaintiff's copyrighted film "Manson."

2 The Court holds that there is no qualitative difference between Plaintiff's 3 intentional interference with prospective economic advantage claim and his 4 copyright claim. Therefore, the state claim is preempted by the Copyright Act.
5 See Worth v. Universal Pictures, 5 F. Supp. 2d 816, 822 (C.D. Call 1997)
6 (plaintiff's claim of intentional interference with prospective economic advantage
7 based on alleged unauthorized use of screenplay is preempted by the Copyright 8 Act); Trenton v. Infinity Broadcasting Corp., 865 F. Supp. 1416, 1428-29 (C.D.
9 Cal. 1994) (plaintiff's claim for interference with prospective economic advantage 10 essentially "assert a protectable copyright interest" in the radio program format 11 and therefore preempted by the Copyright Act). Accordingly, eBay and Richter 12 are entitled to judgment in their favor on the state tortious interference with 13 business advantage claim.

14 DISPOSITION

15 For all of the foregoing reasons, the Court: (1) DENIES Plaintiff's request
16 for further discovery; (2) DENIES the eBay Defendants' motion for summary 17 judgement of the copyright claim; (3) DENIES eBay and Richter's motion for 18 summary judgment of the Lanham Act claim; (4) GRANTS eBay and Richter's 19 motion for summary adjudication of the application of the Lanham Act "innocent 20 infringer" provision; and (5) GRANTS the eBay Defendants' motion for summary 21 judgment of the state tortious interference with business advantage claim.
