

Exhibit 17

LAT Home | My LATimes | Print Edition | All Sections

Jo

Los Angeles Times | Blogs

You are here: LAT Home > Blogs > Bit Player

News

California | Local National World
Entertainment
Business
Sports
Campaign '08
Science
Environment
Opinion
Columnists
Print Edition

The Guide
The Envelope
Travel
Home & Garden
Health
Food
Autos
Books
Image
Arts & Culture
Video
Photography
Blogs
Obituaries
Crossword, Sudoku
All Sections
Corrections

Buy, Sell & More

Jobs
Cars
Real Estate
Apartments
Personals
Deals at Local Stores
Cars

BIT PLAYER

HOLLYWOOD'S LOVE-HATE RELATIONSHIP WITH TECHNOLOGY

« A poster worth 1,000 words | Main | Expanding the view on Vuze »

Promoting new TV through p2p

It's a needle-in-a-haystack world for new TV shows, particularly when they're on cable. That's why so many networks put pilot episodes online well in advance of the series premiere. Still, the Viacom-owned cable network Spike seems to be going one important step beyond its peers in its efforts to build an audience.

Not only is it making the first episode of the new series "Factory" available in advance on its website and through downloadable video stores, it's also trying to spread it through Limewire and other file-sharing networks. Without DRM, or seemingly any form of copy protection.

Spike is working with Jun Group, a firm that specializes in promoting media through p2p networks. Mitchell Reichgut, a principal in Jun Group, acknowledged that other TV programmers had used p2p technology to distribute shows (witness the broad support for Joost, or NBC's work with Pando Networks). But those distributions "have taken place in enclosed, rights-protected 'fish bowls,'" Reichgut said in an e-mail, while "Spike is swimming in the 'ocean' - open P2P networks - where Spike's viewers regularly seek out the latest and greatest new content." In other words, Spike isn't using p2p technology to cut its distribution costs. It's doing it to chase viewers.

Todd Ames, a marketing vice president at Spike, said in an interview that putting the show on file-sharing networks was an acknowledgment of "what people are really doing, and the way consumers are really looking for content." Using DRM, he said, would be self-defeating. "I don't think there's a marketer out there who hasn't been told, 'Get me that viral thing.' And 'get me that viral thing' when it's handcuffed and ball-and-chained is pretty difficult."

It's not something he'd do for just any show, but it made sense for "Factory," a semi-scripted comedy about four working-class buddies (it aspires to be a blue collar version of "The Office" or "Entourage."). "There is no better marketing tool for the show than the show itself, but you've got to be seen," he said. "I'm dealing with something that has no real celebrity, and has never been seen before.... We're trying for a bit of a ubiquity here, to go where the people are."

Still, those file-sharing networks are hotbeds of TV piracy, so Spike's approach is more of a toe-dip than a cannonball. You won't see any TV commercials on Spike touting the

Posted by: Crosbie Fitch | June 13, 2008 at 04:44 AM

Even better is that "Es tut ich Leid" in the unavailability message's background. See it as the German language equivalent to "Us is Sorry". :)

Posted by: fraencko | June 14, 2008 at 05:22 AM

I saw a promo of FACTORY on Spike and was astonished at the lack of sensitivity exhibited by the production when the name of Jesus Christ was used as an expletive. Christians notoriously fail to respond when insulted in the media, but the media cowards certainly avoid using Allah or Muhammed. Perhaps we need a Christian Jihad against the Know-Nothings at Spike.

Posted by: Richard Warren | June 24, 2008 at 04:50 PM

Post a comment

If you are under 13 years of age you may read this message board, but you may not participate.

Here are the full legal terms you agree to by using this comment form.

Comments are moderated, and will not appear until they've been approved.

If you have a TypeKey or TypePad account, please Sign In

Name:

E-mail Address:

URL:

Remember personal info?

Comments:

T
T
T
L
V
V
V
Y
|
|
:
:
:
:
|
|
:
:
:
:
|
|
:
:
:
:
|
|

More on LATimes.com

California/Local | National | World | Sports
Opinion | Entertainment | Travel | Health
L.A. Wheels | Real Estate

Partners

Hoy | KTLA | Boodle.com | ShopLocal
Shopping | Grocery Coupons

CI
C:
(F