Chris,
 this is the thread on this call.
 agenda would be to discuss what we might want to do in this space.
 again, my last action item from the integration stuff -- somewhat lower priority so left here to january.
 is this thread useful?
 Stephen

Chad had the idea, in part: there are two parts to it: tracking rights an= a clearinghouse for rights. extension to fingerprinting once you have found copyrighted material, and presuming the owner might hav= embraced it/ or anyway, one has a check for $100 that goes to the copyright owners, who are they? Bob Dylan's estate whittled down to 7 different owners with different percentage shares, etc.

where is the universal database of all the copyrights and trickled down ownership splits? should someone in the industry create/ allow self-population of such a universal database. and then maybe someone even servè as a third-party clearinghouse. (the Philips guys are trying to set up MediaHedge as such a third party clearinghouse) etc.

should "we" (google/youtube do it) -- or a neutral industry party -- RedHat for Linux type, etc.

those are the threads. just to explore.

it was the very last of my action items from the integration work -- lower priority so pushed out until now.

that's what i know on it.

useful?
