This can't be right. We don't have the rights to put our own content into a licensing agreement with google for instance??? I need to see the actual language please

Digital clip rights belong to CBS, and actually are included in the definition of merchandising rights, along with games, wireless applications and new media platforms. (There is, as I noted, a limited exception for licensing clips into motion pictures, tv shows and print publications.) CBS also retains rights for "Made for New Media" productions, which envisions content not created for initial distribution via theatrical, DTV or TV. So to summarize: Paramount does not have the merchandising and clip licensing rights that we need.

Right. My understanding is that the only clip licensing paramount retains is to license clips into other tv shows and movies. (According to Norman, these have been handled by the film clip licensing dept -- Larry McCallister). I'll reconfirm by looking at the split agreements again now and will get back to you asap. Mark

Hi Derek – In response to your question yesterday afternoon, Paramount does not have the merchandising and licensing rights for the Star Trek movies. The split agreement gave CBS control of merchandising rights for all Star Trek properties, including movies. Best. Mark
