Importance: High

Bay has apparently identified 700,000 clips of the programs we have listed with them that they have to review as possible infringements.
(Btw, his prediction is that 50,000 to 100,000 of them will be real infringements with the others not containing our material, but just containing references to our programs.) He will have to bring in a significant number of temps to meet the January 2 deadline which he will do if that date is immovable. However, every additional day we can provide him will ease the burden. Could you let us know if there is any flexibility on that date?

Re YouTube Take-Down Notices

Dear Mr Fricklas

We are writing to express the concerns of the ACLU of Northern California regarding Viacom's recent action in sending over 100,000 take-down notices to YouTube last Friday. While we recognize and support Viacom's right to protect the integrity of its copyrighted material, the enforcement of that right cannot come at the expense of the rights of YouTube users whose video clips do not violate the copyright laws.

YouTube is an important and vibrant forum for creativity and commentary on the Internet. Much of the work on YouTube is entirely original. But other work, like so much in the world of art, politics, criticism, and social commentary, makes its point through reference to or incorporation of the words or pictures of others. The fair use doctrine is the means by which the Constitution and the laws of copyright accommodate that process.

Based on recent press reports, it appears that at least some video clips that made no use of material copyrighted by Viacom, have nevertheless been swept up in the YouTube take-down notices. In addition, we do not know what process, if any, Viacom used to determine whether the use of any material from Viacom programs falls within fair use doctrine.

Parody, political commentary, and criticism, like news reporting, all go to the heart of expression protected by the First Amendment and the fair use doctrine. Whether a particular video clip comes within the protection of the fair use doctrine is a determination that can only be made on a case by case basis. For these reasons, it is imperative that copyright holders, including Viacom, conduct a careful review of material believed to be infringing prior to sending out DMCA take-down notices. That review should include, at a minimum, (1) a review of the material by a human being to ensure that the potentially infringing material is actually using the copyright holder's work without authorization; and (2) a reasonable fair use analysis for each potentially infringing work to ensure that works that legitimately use copyrighted material are not swept in by any take-down notices.

The public discussion generated by Viacom's take-down notices to YouTube would be benefited greatly by further information from Viacom regarding the steps that it took prior to issuing the take-down notices. Specifically, please advise us if Viacom did in fact have a human being review each of the allegedly infringing video clips and if a fair use analysis was conducted. To the extent Viacom did not do so, we urge Viacom to take a more measured approach in the future in its efforts to protect its copyrights, one that takes into account the constitutional rights of Internet speakers and the important First Amendment values embodied in the fair use doctrine.

We look forward to hearing from you. Thank you for your attention to this important matter.

Very truly yours,

Ann Brick

I certainly appreciate everyone's help, especially over the long weekend!

If you're not familiar with the process, videos are reviewed here:
<http://www.youtube.com/admin.php>

Please reject any nudity/porn and any death videos, along with anything else that's glaringly inappropriate.

As far as copyright stuff is concerned, be on the look out for Family Guy, South Park, and full-length anime episodes...music videos and news programs are fine to approve.

Please mark bikinis and other racy but not entirely inappropriate vids as racy, using the 'Approve, mark as racy' dropdown selection.

Other than that, just use your impartial judgment. The community is pretty good at flagging stuff, so you can lean on them to catch anything that slips through. That said, we do have some inspired uber conservatives that flag excessively, so no need to reject everything that gets flagged.

Cheers, and gobble, gobble!

~Brent

Subject: New Reuters Story: Google will offer anti-piracy tools to all Copyright holders

Ken Li from Reuters called us with the heads-up about this story resulting from an interview with Eric Schmidt this evening.

Google sees video anti-piracy tools as priority

Thu Feb 22, 2007 3:09 AM GMT 163<<http://i.today.reuters.co.uk/images/spacer.gif>>

By Eric Auchard

SAN FRANCISCO (Reuters) - Google Inc. (GOOG.O), racing to head off a media industry backlash over its video Web site YouTube, will soon offer anti-piracy technologies to help all copyright holders thwart unauthorized video sharing, its chief executive said on Wednesday.

"We are definitely committed to (offering copyright protection technologies)," Google Chief Executive Officer Eric Schmidt said in an interview. "It is one of the company's highest priorities," he said.

"We just reviewed that (issue) about an hour ago," Schmidt told Reuters when asked what Google was doing to make anti-piracy technologies widely available to video owners. "It is going to roll out very soon ... It is not far away."

YouTube, which Google acquired late last year, plans to introduce technology to help media companies identify pirated videos uploaded by users.

But, to date, the tools are only being offered as part of broader licensing talks, media industry insiders complain.

Schmidt declined to give a specific timeframe of weeks or months to cover all potential users, saying that any move would take time to cover all Google's services, including YouTube, and to be made available to all copyright holders wishing to use the anti-piracy technology.

"It is not some product you can just build and leave alone," Schmidt said. Protecting copyrighted material is likely to involve an endless cat-and-mouse game to keep pace with hackers bent on breaking such security tools.

MySpace, the popular Internet social network owned by News Corp. (NWSa.N: Quote <<http://today.reuters.co.uk/stocks/Quote.aspx?symbol=NWSa.N&WTmodLoc=NewsArt-C1-ArticlePage2>> , Profile <<http://today.reuters.co.uk/stocks/CompanyProfile.aspx?ticker=NWSa.N&WTmodLoc=NewsArt-C1-ArticlePage2>> , Research <<http://today.reuters.co.uk/stocks/ResearchReports.aspx?ticker=NWSa.N&WTmodLoc=NewsArt-C1-ArticlePage2>> ) said last week it would offer its own version of copyright protection services for free. MySpace is YouTube's biggest rival.

YouTube's "proposition that they will only protect copyrighted content if there's a business deal in place is unacceptable," a spokesman for Viacom Inc. Schmidt said Google plans to make video anti-piracy tools generally available to copyright owners. "We have to do that," he said, but cautioned that, "It takes a while to roll this stuff out" on a wide basis.

Earlier this month, Viacom demanded YouTube remove more than 100,000 Viacom video clips from the site after the two sides failed to reach a distribution agreement.

In a prepared statement last week, YouTube said the process of identifying copyrighted material is not an automated process and required the cooperation of media company partners.

For instance, a clip of a TV show owned by one company might contain music produced by another, making the process of identifying ownership difficult.

"These matters are very complicated and we are working with our partners to identify and solve these problems," YouTube said in an e-mailed statement issued last week.
