Hi Bill,

FYI, John Tucker is putting together a MOU for AHC and NHCC on the biodiesel front. You'll be getting that soon. Basically, it says that AHC owns the assets recovered from Biodiesel Cambodia and that NHCC will manage the project and deliver the biodiesel to AHC at cost plus a management fee. The plantation owners just informed me that they are doing their best to harvest the Jatropha nonetheless and will sell it to us (the new management team) at cost. All good news.

From AHC's perspective, it's quite simple. Not another penny will come out of FWAB's budget for this project other than purchasing the biodiesel at a reduced cost and that should start happening soon. I might be able to recover the losses after all!!

Merry Christmas,

Basil

P.S. I don't know if you've been following the whole Madoff scandal on Wall Street, but it's extremely interesting from our perspective. My brother Peter knows all the cast of characters. Fortunately he's stayed far away from it all and has instructed others to do the same for years. I was actually in the fund in 2002 but Peter counseled me out of it. Missed by that much.
