Introduction

by ARTHUR C. CLARKE

There cannot be many science fiction novels that end with a 40-page appendix full of mathematical equations and electric-circuit diagrams. Don't worry—this isn't one of them; but just such a book inspired it, half a century ago. And with any luck, during the next half-century it will cease to be fiction.

It must have been in 1937 or '38, when I was Treasurer of the five-year-old British Interplanetary Society (annual budget to start the conquest of space, about $200), that the BIS was sent a book with a rather odd title, by an author with an even odder name. "Akkad Pseudoman's" Zero to Eighty (Princeton: Scientific Publishing Company, 1937) must now be quite a rarity; I am indebted to my old friend Frederick I. Ordway III (responsible for the technical designs in 2001: A Space Odyssey) for the fine copy I possess.

The snappy subtitle says it all:

Being my lifetime doings,
reflections, and inventions also my journey round the Moon

Quite an "also"; I can hear the author's modest cough.
He was not, of course, really Mr. Pseudoman, as the pref-

There are all kinds of early readers. Many children learn to read during the 5-7 age range. Some learn to read through books with strong plots and characters, and some through those children's easy readers like the Real Kids Readers and Bank Street Readers. No matter how you learn to read, you'll use help from programs that use familiar words. Children at this age are also getting more interested in the world around them, and need books that provide information. Bookland offers a variety of books to meet these needs.
