Welcome

March 5, 1999

It has been 10 weeks since I've been alone. Difficult to say how it feels. Hopeless. Promising. As anyone who was following (and has by now given up on) this site can tell, nothing has happened in that time. But every thing has happened, too. And sitting here, back in Sri Lanka where the March air is growing still and fiery, I don't know where to begin.

Of course, part of the problem has been phone lines, computer crashes, and the loss of my camera. But beyond that, I haven't even finished cataloging the photographs from my last weeks in Sri Lanka. And so far, I haven't begun to make copies of the hundreds that are still here, waiting to be collected. I haven't finished interviews with many people, haven't begun still more. Since I can't easily describe the last few months here, I'll turn to the present.

6 de Soysa Avenue, Mount Lavinia, Sri Lanka. This is my current home, the place where I am trying to write and catalogue and work. You may have written to me here care of Mrs. R. Sansoni at one point. Right now, I am the only one in these small, dark three rooms aside from a few cockroaches and the rat who tries nightly to nibble my soap. I sit in my sarong in front of a rusty old fan and listen to fairly awful Colombo radio, punctuated occasionally good songs and news updates. I now understand why Colombo-ites always run to the hills in April. It is already unbearably hot. Too hot to think, to hot to move away from the fan. I actually unplug and carry it from room to room.

So what's new? Maybe my whole life right now. California feels farther than ever, almost unmentionable. If you get a chance, drop me a line from reality. I am back to the drawing board . . . Let's see what comes up. Everything old is still here and anything new is listed below. Enjoy and do consider writing -- c/o Astrid de Silva, 6/6 Cross Rd. Mt Lavinia or vsingh@writeme.com.

•Introduction

Sometimes we just begin. We do things without understanding--thinking and planning them simply because we know we must. We follow roads and explore the woods and wonder about the dark places we are scared of. This is the kind of journey I am on. Looking around this site you will see through windows I put up. You may find stories about my family, music played by friends, photographs of distant places. Occasionally you may even find something worth reading. Since most of you know me or are associated with Peninsula School, I welcome you as friends and offer my own impressions and insights without censorship, fact-checking, or much proofreading. Take what is here as conversation, not necessarily accurate fact. In other words, kids, don't use me as a source for the next writing assignment.

For anyone unaware of what I am doing, here is the short version: Over the year I am gathering my family stories around the world. The journey will take me to the following countries: The U.S., Canada, England, France, Sri Lanka, India, Vietnam, Bali, and Australia. This website is a way for me to share some of my experiences.

As you can see, the site is organized into six areas. At the moment there is very little content and some areas may be empty. Hopefully they will fill as I go along. So far, I have not begun processing and posting audio. Sometime after Christmas, I hope. The six areas are:

- My Family--Mostly photographs and brief descriptions about the people I am learning about or talking to. I may also add some anecdotes and stories.
- Places Along the Way--Photographs and my impressions of some of the places I visit.
- Profiles--Interviews with interesting people I meet while traveling. In the works as I figure out the best way to incorporate sound.
- Journal--Not the actual day-to-day thing but occasional adaptations of my personal writing. In other words I leave out the embarrassing stuff. Bummer.
- Home--What you're looking at right now.
- Other Writing--This may be the least developed area. It could include fictional stories or unrelated writing I do. Also accounts of my family that are either old or fictionalized or both.

Most of the content should be viewable with Netscape and Internet Explorer versions 3 and higher. Audio files will probably be streaming Quicktime movies (.mov). To listen you will need the Apple Quicktime plug-in, available for Mac OS, Windows 95 and Windows NT. If a link doesn't work, it means I have not created that section yet. Setting your font size to the default value (middle for Internet Explorer, 12 points for Netscape), rather than any larger or smaller, will help keep things properly aligned. Please TELL ME about any problems.

All active links should appear underlined and blue or RED if you've visited them. Black words are just words.

What is an Ibook?

An Ibook is an electronic book. Ibooks are built on top of websites, but they are more than websites. You can browse and read Ibooks just like conventional websites, but you can also add to or modify them, quickly and automatically, without needing to know about file transfer, permissions, or directory structures. You can never accidentally destroy existing pages in an Ibook because all changes are kept. Each Ibook page starts with a documentary line that looks like this:

This shows that the contributor helenr last modified this page on Friday 19th January. To see what it looked like before she modified it you can click on Previous Revision. To see all previous revisions, click on Revision Index.

These lines (we call them "itags") are generated and updated automatically. You are welcome to explore the itags at the top of any of the pages on this site.

Can I contribute to Ibooks?

We hope you will. First you need to find the Ibook you want to contribute to. You could contribute to this one - the Ibook Ibook, or you could try one of the other public Ibooks listed here. Before you can make changes you need to do two things:

1. Enroll in the Ibook of your choice. To Enroll in this one, click here.
2. Install our software - The Ibook Controller. You will not be able to do this until you have enrolled. The Ibook Controller provides you with a remote control interface to allow you to create and change pages in the Ibook, as well as organise and navigate your pages.

Once you have the Ibook controller, you will be able to use your own Web Page Editor to start making changes.

Can I have my own Ibook?

Yes, subject to some rules, you can have an Ibook Server working on your own websites. Once you are enrolled you will be able to read about how to set up an Ibook Server.

How stable and reliable is the Ibook software?

The Ibook Controller and Server software are at the prototype stage. This is stage 2 of the four part development process described on <http://web.archive.org/web/20010203222200/http://www.familysystems.com/>. In practice, this means that though the software is in daily use by many people, some aspects of it may still have problems or are not yet completed. We rely on feedback from the software's many users to iron out these problems.

This iBook system is in an experimental stage as we transition from a Version 2.0 iBook system based on Java servlets and applets to a Version 3 system based completely on Perl and Javascript. Transitioning to a system based on Perl and Javascript will allow iBook systems to be installed in almost any hosting environment including inexpensive shared hosting accounts available from most common providers. The first v3 iBook system is now available on <http://web.archive.org/web/20051111203432/http://co-op.iBook.com/>

We encourage you to try out iBook systems by enrolling on this site and thereby creating an iBook identity for yourself. You can customise your iBook identity by using the toolbar which appears at the top of the browser window. Soon, you will be able to install iBook behaviour on any website that supports Perl, thereby creating a cooperative site of interest to you. For more information on our earlier products, please go to <http://web.archive.org/web/20051111203432/http://www.iBook.com/>.
