Family Systems Ltd. of New York and the Norton Practice Ltd., a financial services consultancy based in Reading, England, have today announced that they are jointly developing a new system of Norton client Websites based around Family Systems iBook technology. Norton are also developing iBook templates that will help others build similar solutions for professional services clients.

Under an agreement between the two companies, Norton is the lead customer for Family Systems iBook solutions for professional services firms. Norton's work implementing iBooks as the foundation of a new client communication system will help Family Systems™ launch their range of collaboration tools including Family Systems iBook® software and MySharer™, the Family Systems web content publishing tool.

"We are very pleased that The Norton Practice has decided to use Family Systems iBooks as the platform for their new client collaboration system," said Brian Reynolds, founder of Family Systems, Ltd. "They are helping us pioneer iBooks for business use and working with us to design the delivery model for Family Systems products and services to the professional service firm marketplace."

"The role Norton plays with clients can vary enormously," according to Andrew Norton, Norton Practice founder and CEO. "It can involve bookkeeping only, or it can mean acting as chief financial officer, or anything in between. We often serve American high tech companies as their accounting department or international controller in Europe. Client relationships are intimate and critical.

"Family Systems iBooks allow us to provide our clients with something a bit special, collaborative Websites and other productivity enhancing technologies that help our positioning between the Big Five and the smaller firms that offer a more personal service. iBooks will help people see us as somewhere in the middle, giving a blend of both," said Norton.

Family Systems itself is a distributed technology research and development organization that makes extensive use of its own work group collaboration technologies. A wide variety of innovative contributors each operate from their home locations internationally. The intellectual property they create and manage -- software code, documentation, Web pages, and recorded conference calls -- is stored on ibook-enabled servers for web, fax and telephone content. #### About Norton Practice

The Norton Practice (Reading, about 40 miles west of London) is a firm of chartered accountants set up eight years ago to offer a Big Five service without the Big Five overheads. The Norton Practice has virtually doubled every year and has grown to a staff total of 50 including four partners. A new venture, Norton International, now offers Norton clients, and especially American firms expanding into Europe, coordinated financial services across 13 European countries.
