MEMORANDUM OF LAW IN REPLY TO OPPOSITION OF THE UNITED STATES
TO MOTION BY BOB KOHN FOR LEAVE TO INTERVENE
FOR THE SOLE PURPOSE OF APPEAL

INTRODUCTION

Bob Kohn, on his own behalf and through his pro bono attorneys, respectfully submits this memorandum in reply to the opposition of the United States to his motion for leave to intervene for the sole purpose of appeal.

Movant submitted a reply brief at Docket No. 130 and was asked to re-file the document due, apparently, to some technical difficulties with the form of the brief. Movant is having trouble precisely pinpointing some of those deficiencies¹, but at the Court's request, Movant re-files this Reply memorandum, which sets forth the key points reflected in Movant's earlier attempted Reply.

REPLY

I. MOVANT HAS A CLAIM OR DEFENSE THAT SHARES WITH THE MAIN ACTION A COMMON QUESTION OF LAW OR FACT

The DOJ cites not one Tunney Act case to support its contention that Movant has no claim or defense that shares with the main action a common question of law or fact. In Massachusetts v. Microsoft Corp., 373 F.3d 1199, 1234-36, n 19 (D.C. Cir. 2004), two trade associations were permitted to intervene for the sole purpose of appeal. Neither of them were “alleged to have...engaged in and activities that form bases for claims” in the Complaint in that case; by the same token, neither trade association could have asserted any valid antitrust claims against Microsoft. Yet both associations were permitted to intervene for the sole purposes of appeal. This was consistent with Judge Wald’s view that one seeking to intervene for purposes of appellate review to “correct a district court’s ‘public interest’ determination when the record indicates the determination is contrary to the dictates of the Tunney Act” may be any “non-party well-situated to demonstrate that this is so.” Massachusetts School of Law at Andover, Inc. v. United States, 118 F.3d 776, 785 (D.C. Cir. 1997) (Judge Wald, concurring) (“MSL”). See also, Flying J Inc. v. Van Hollen, 578 F.3d 569, 573 (7th Cir. 2009) (“This requirement is satisfied because the association wants to present the same defense that the defendants presented”).

II. INTERVENTION WILL NOT UNDULY DELAY THE ADJUDICATION OF THE RIGHTS OF THE ORIGINAL PARTIES

An appeal, while a Final Judgment remains effective pending any reversal or modification, is not a delay of an adjudication. The DOJ should be reminded that the Court denied Movant’s motion to stay the execution of the Final Judgment. Order dated September 10, 2012 (Docket No. 111). As the D.C. Circuit stated in Microsoft,

We think it sufficient the consent decree was already in place in the settling states' case when CCIA and SIIA sought intervention in December 2002: Allowing them to appeal from the Tunney Act proceeding will not delay "adjudicat[ing] ... the rights of the original parties," FED. R. CIV. P. 24(b), because the settling states' decree requires Microsoft to conduct itself in the same manner as it must under the decree it entered into with the Government. See New York v. Microsoft Corp., 231 F.Supp.2d 203, 205-06

Massachusetts v. Microsoft Corp., 373 F.3d at 1236 (D.C. Cir. 2004), (D.D.C.2002).

Nor will the parties be otherwise prejudiced by the intervenors' appeal. CCIA and SIIA had already participated extensively in the proceedings before the district court by submitting public comments in response to the proposed consent decree, see Comments of CCIA (Jan. 28, 2002), 2 J.A. (I) at 455-598; Comments of SIIA (Jan. 28, 2002), 3 J.A. (I) at 990-1057, and appearing as amici in the hearing on the proposed decree, see 3/6/02 pm Tr. at 156-65, 3 J.A. (I) at 1536-45. Because the district court already confronted CCIA's and SIIA's arguments in rendering its decision, there is no reason to fear "issue proliferation," "confusion," "extra cost," or "an increased risk of error," see MSL, 118 F.3d at 782, if the associations are allowed to appeal the district court's public-interest determination. Thus do the unusual procedural and substantive circumstances in this case converge to obviate any undue "delay or prejudice" that might otherwise have attended CCIA's and SIIA's appeal. Accordingly, we reverse the order of the district court denying intervention and permit CCIA and SIIA to intervene for the purpose of appealing the district court's public-interest determination.

Id. As to whether a pleading need be filed under Rule 24, Movant has already addressed this question in his memorandum supporting the motion. Suffice it to add here footnote 19 from Microsoft in its entirety:

[19] The Government and Microsoft claim CCIA and SIIA may not intervene because they did not include with their motion to intervene "a pleading setting forth the claim or defense for which intervention is sought." FED. R. CIV. P. 24(c). Neither the Government nor Microsoft explains what type of pleading the would-be intervenors could have filed in a case such as this, where a judgment had already been rendered. In any event, "procedural defects in connection with intervention motions should generally be excused by a court." McCarthy v. Kleindienst, 741 F.2d 1406, 1416 (D.C.Cir.1984). The Government acknowledged as much at oral argument, stating, "this Court and other courts have not be[en] hypertechnical, actually, in making sure that ... potential intervenors do file a pleading." The Government and Microsoft make no claim they had inadequate notice of the intervenors' appeal, and we find no reason to bar intervention based solely upon this technical defect, if defect it be.

III. THE COURT HAS ALREADY FOUND THAT MOVANT WILL AID THE COURT IN ITS PUBLIC INTEREST DETERMINATION

When the Court granted Movant's motion for leave to participate as amicus curiae, the Court, at least implicitly, found that Movant would aid the Court in its public interest determination. Order dated August 28, 2012 (Docket No. 108). Movant is mindful of the Court's disagreement with his contention that the entry of the Final Judgment is not in the public interest, but this does not mean that a contrary point of view does not aid the court in its public interest determination.

The DOJ acknowledged in its Opposition Memorandum (at 5) that Movant is seeking to challenge whether the "factual foundation of the government's decisions are such that government's conclusions regarding the proposed settlement are reasonable." United States v. Keyspan Corp., 783 F. Supp.2d 633 (S.D.N.Y. 2011). This is the standard the government itself put forth as the standard the Court should use in making its public interest determination. The DOJ seems to view Movant's challenge of the government's conclusions as the equivalent of Movant seeking to require the government to "prove its case." This assertion, which the government has used repeatedly in reference to Movant's contentions, is frivolous. If Movant hears it one more time, he may be tempted to write another comic brief (though he promises not to file it with this Court).

Finally, the DOJ contends that Movant is trying to "force upon the United States the trial of an antitrust case it has already settled." Opp at 6. Movant is trying to force an appeal upon the United States, not a trial. Only a Court can force a trial, or a reconsideration of the terms of the Final Judgment, upon the parties in its review of the public interest determination. If the DOJ is contending that the Final Judgment is simply not subject to an appeal, it has not cited any case to that effect.

CONCLUSION

Movant is mindful that the Court denied his motion to stay the effect of the Final Judgment. Movant contends that he and the public will suffer serious and irreversible harm if he is unable to promptly initiate an appeal of the entry of Final Judgment during the next few days or weeks, as compliance with the terms of the Final Judgment, in Movant's view, is beginning to have long-term anti-competitive effects in the market for trade e-books. For all these reasons, the Court should grant Movant's motion and permit him to intervene in this case for the sole purpose of promptly appealing the Court's Order and entry of Final Judgment.
