Loulou de la Falaise's new jewelry 'Fantaisies'By Natasha Montrose

Wednesday, February 28, 2007

Loulou de la Falaise "is the woman I design for, imaginative, individual and forever chic," the designer Zac Posen declares.

The muse of Yves Saint-Laurent for more than 30 years, Falaise is creating her first diffusion line of jewelry and decorative objects for the home, called "Loulou de la Falaise Fantaisie."

"There's a reason my diffusion line is called Fantaisies. Each piece is a fantasy — because things shouldn't be serious, but fun and enhancing," Falaise said.

Hubert de Givenchy says that Falaise's style is "personal, elegant and refined" and that "her designs are gypsy but chic."

That signature style is reflected in the new collection's five themes: for example, "Klimt" is inspired by the artist's work; "Jardin," by her country garden. The others are "Naga," "Laque" and "Venise."

In addition to her multi-strand necklaces of semiprecious stones, sets of horn bracelets and oversized earrings, the collection includes a small homeware line, with frames, boxes and pots of lacquered wood and eggshell and throws made from Falaise's favorite fabrics — one side consists of boiled wool and velvet, the other is silk and mohair.

The products are priced from €30 to €300, or $40 to almost $400, and are being sold at her boutiques on the left and right banks of Paris, the Rue Cambon and Rue de Bourgogne respectively.

De la Falaise's company would not disclose its sales but, she said, "it is only by doing licenses that a small company can survive," so she recently designed a bracelet for the Parisian store Colette.

The store's spokeswoman said they had chosen Falaise for the project because they appreciated her image and believed that the €150 bracelet, made of waxed cotton with a leitmotif of a wolf in vermeil, would appeal to clients.
