Welcome to Hikipedia!

Welcome to Hikipedia - a free database of hiking trails built by the hiking community.

Find the trails that fit your needs

Hikipedia's search engine let's you find the trails that fit your needs. For ideas of search criteria, take a look at the examples below:

- Look for trails that are within 150 miles from Seattle, WA
- Search for trails that you can hike in the current month
- Include only trails that aren't very difficult

Prepare for your hike

Information stored on Hikipedia helps you prepare for your hike. On a trail description page you can quickly check the elevation gain, round trip length and trailhead location. You can see how other hikers voted for trail's difficulty and enjoyability. Integration with other websites gives you weather forecasts from AccuWeather, driving directions from Google, topo maps from MyTopo and nearby geocaches from GeoCaching.

To see what a trail description page looks like, you can ask Hikipedia to take you to a random trail.

Share your hiking experience

Hikipedia costs nothing to use - we just ask you to consider sharing your hiking experience with other hikers using Hikipedia. Information you submit is explicitly placed in the public domain to make sure your contributions will benefit the hiking community without any legal restrictions.

There are quite a few ways to contribute:

- Tell others about Hikipedia
- Link to Hikipedia from your website
- Vote for trail difficulty, enjoyability and photos
- Add or improve information about existing trails
- Send a trail report from your hike
- Submit photos
- Submit a new trail

Over the last year, the database has grown from 71 to 183 trails (157.7% growth :-). The list of the most recently submitted trails is available on the statistics page. Thank you very much for your help in building Hikipedia!

Notice:
Traveling in the backcountry can be hazardous. You are responsible for informing yourself about these hazards and taking necessary precautions. Information on this web site comes from volunteer reporters and may contain errors or omissions. A current guidebook and proper equipment are essential for safe enjoyment of the hikes posted on this site.
