THIS MATTER is before the court on Defendant Boston Scientific Corporation's (BSC) Motion to Sever and Conduct Individual Trials, Plaintiffs' Memorandum in Opposition, and Defendant's Reply. (Docs. 133, 134, 137, 152).

On May 15, 2015, the undersigned consolidated these matters for trial sua sponte pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 42(a)(1). (Doc. 108). The Court consolidated these two cases for trial upon initial review of the record, noting the existence of "common question[s] of law or fact." (Id.) BSC's motion, although well taken, does not alter the Court's view that consolidation for trial is, in fact, proper. Significantly, the two consolidated trials that have occurred to date within In re: Boston Scientific Corp. Pelvic Repair Sys. Prods. Liab. Litig., MDL No. 2326 – both involving the same BSC product – have been successfully and efficiently litigated.¹ As more thoroughly analyzed within Plaintiffs' response, the common issues of law and fact, as well as the Arnold factors, favor consolidation.² (Doc. 137, 2–5). Similarly, the Court finds that BSC will not be unduly prejudiced by consolidation. See e.g., Frankum v. Boston Scientific Corp., 1:15CV91-MOC, June 22, 2015 ("[T]he court finds that any potential jury confusion and prejudice can be avoided if the evidence is presented in an organized manner and with proper jury instructions"). In short, consolidation of these two individual plaintiff's causes of action for trial is quite manageable and will serve the interests of justice. For these reasons, BSC's motion will be denied.

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that Boston Scientific Corporation's Motion to Sever and Conduct Individual Trials is hereby DENIED.

Signed: July 17, 2015

Richard L. Voorhees United States District Judge
