

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF OHIO
EASTERN DIVISION

JAMES O. MORRIS,

Plaintiff,

vs.

Civil Action 2:12-CV-595
Judge Sargus
Magistrate Judge King

Carolyn Colvin, Commissioner of Social Security,

Defendant.

REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION

This is an action instituted under the provisions of 42 U.S.C. §§ 405(g), 1383(c), for review of a final decision of the Commissioner of Social Security denying plaintiff's applications for disability insurance benefits and supplemental security income benefits. This matter is now before the Court on plaintiff's Statement of Errors, Doc. No. 14, the Commissioner's Memorandum in Opposition, Doc. No. 19, and plaintiff's Reply, Doc. No. 20.

Plaintiff James O. Morris filed his initial applications for benefits on June 22, 2005, as a result of delayed learning. The applications were denied, PageID 100-13, 210, and plaintiff did not appeal that decision.

Plaintiff filed his current applications for benefits on May 29, 2008, alleging that he has been disabled since May 3, 2008, again by reason of low cognitive functioning. PageID 191-93, 194-200, 214. The applications were denied initially and upon reconsideration, and plaintiff requested a de novo hearing before an administrative law judge.

A hearing was held on January 11, 2011, at which plaintiff, represented by counsel, appeared and testified. Steven S. Rosenthal, a vocational expert, appeared but was not called to testify. PageID 96. In a decision dated February 16, 2011, the administrative law judge concluded that plaintiff is not disabled within the meaning of the Social Security Act. PageID 67-74. That decision became the final decision of the Commissioner of Social Security when the Appeals Council declined review on May 14, 2012. PageID 46-50.

Plaintiff was 32 years old on his alleged disability onset date. PageID 209. He has a high school education in classes for the developmentally handicapped. PageID 83-84, 219. He has past relevant work experience as a golf course laborer, a packer, and a box assembler. PageID 215.

Plaintiff lives in a camper next to his mother's and step-father's house. PageID 91. He does not bathe or change clothes regularly. PageID 92. He can prepare some simple meals; his mother sometimes reads preparation directions to him. PageID 88. He is unable to manage money or make change. PageID 88.

Plaintiff testified at the administrative hearing that he was bullied in school, PageID 85, and grew "more angry at people." PageID 85-86. That anger has never gone away. PageID 86. Raised voices trigger severe anxiety and suicidal thoughts. PageID 91.

Plaintiff takes medication for bipolar disorder, but the medication causes negative emotional responses. PageID 88-90. Plaintiff's mother helps him remember and attend his medical appointments. PageID 87.

Plaintiff has held various jobs since high school but quit, or was fired, from most positions because he became upset with others or was unable to meet the mental demands of the job. PageID 88, 93, 95.

Plaintiff began treatment at Scioto Paint Valley Mental Health Center ("Scioto") in December 2005. PageID 346. At a March 19, 2008 diagnostic assessment, conducted at the request of plaintiff's attorney, PageID 359-64, plaintiff complained of an "abusive childhood, difficulty keeping up on jobs and losing them frequently, having no tolerance for yelling and screaming and at times threatening to kill himself if folks don't shut up." PageID 359. Plaintiff was diagnosed with post-traumatic stress disorder and borderline intellectual functioning; he was assigned a GAF score of 53.¹ PageID 364. He was referred to a psychiatric evaluation and case management services. PageID 363.

¹"GAF," or Global Assessment of Functioning, is a tool used by health-care professionals to assess a person's psychological, social, and occupational functioning on a hypothetical continuum of mental illness. It is, in general, a snapshot of a person's "overall psychological functioning" at or near the time of the evaluation. Martin v. Commissioner, 61 Fed.Appx. 191, 194 n.2 (6th Cir. 2003). See Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders, 4th ed., Text Revision ("DSM-IV-TR") at 32-34. Individuals with scores of 51-60 are classified as having "moderate symptoms ... or moderate difficulty in social, occupational, or school functioning (e.g., few friends, conflicts with peers or co-workers)." DSM-IV-TR at 34.

Pam Sayre-Butt, LISW, has provided counseling to plaintiff, PageID 359-66, 371-407, 451-63, 489-90, 492, 521-27, 570-77, and J. Mark Hamill, M.D., provides medication management, PageID 367-69, 464-65, 550-58, 571, 573. Treatment notes reflect plaintiff's reports of anxiety and irritability when yelled at or when others speak in loud voices; he does not like strangers approaching him.

In January 2008, Earl Stump, Ph.D., a psychologist at Scioto, examined plaintiff upon the referral of Ms. Sayre-Butt and diagnosed borderline intellectual functioning. PageID 351. According to Dr. Stump, plaintiff's low cognitive functioning "probably" accounts for plaintiff's educational deficiency and poses "significant barriers to stable employment." Id. Plaintiff's condition has been complicated by a "probable Schizotypal Personality Disorder marked by odd beliefs and thinking, unusual perceptual experiences, suspiciousness, eccentric dress, and an inability to maintain close relationships." Id. Dr. Stump concluded that plaintiff's employment "would be limited to well supervised, laboring jobs with little public contact and few demands on educational skills." PageID 352. The following month, Dr. Stump clarified his opinion: by "well supervised," Dr. Stump meant that plaintiff should be closely supervised because, in all likelihood, he will make mistakes. Moreover, plaintiff's supervisor should be sensitive to plaintiff's special needs. The environment contemplated by Dr. Stump would be similar to a "sheltered workshop." Plaintiff could not work with the public or with the supervision typical in a "mainstream" job. PageID 353.

On July 28, 2008, Steven J. Meyer, Ph. D., reviewed plaintiff's mental health treatment records for the state agency and concluded that plaintiff had mild limitations in his activities of daily living, and moderate difficulties in maintaining social functioning and in maintaining concentration, persistence or pace. PageID 422. Dr. concluded that plaintiff has the following mental residual functional capacity:

Although he does have some difficulty getting along with people, he specifies that this problem occurs when people are being mean or yelling. He does have friends that he spends time with and is able to get along when motivated to do so. Further, [plaintiff] reported on the ADL form that he sees people when lying in bed but he denied current symptoms of psychosis, delusions, and hallucinations to his TS [treating source]. His statements are partially credible. There is no TS opinion regarding the [plaintiff]'s ability to work, therefore weight cannot be assigned. However, great consideration is given to the report supplied by the [plaintiff]'s TS. The [plaintiff] appears to have the mental capacity for simple and some moderately complex routine tasks, oral and hands on instruction, intermittent/occasional interactions with others, and some assistance as needed at times of change in routine[.]

PageID 410-11. On February 5, 2009, state agency psychologist Bruce Goldsmith, Ph.D., affirmed Dr. Meyers' opinion. PageID 471.

On December 9, 2008, Dr. Hamill completed a mental status questionnaire in which he noted that plaintiff acts more like a teen than a 32 year old. Plaintiff's mood and affect alternated between euphoric and irritable. He was socially anxious but pleasant and cooperative; he spoke in a pressured manner and was sometimes tangential in his conversation. PageID 448. Plaintiff's IQ score fell in the borderline range; he had very limited insight and poor judgment. Id. According to Dr. Hamill, plaintiff's ability to remember, understand and follow directions was poor; he could follow only very simple and concrete instructions; his ability to maintain attention was poor; he could perform only very simple tasks. Plaintiff would react "extremely poorly" to pressures in a work setting, even to pressure in the form of a request to speed his work pace. PageID 449.

On June 1, 2010, Dr. Hamill characterized plaintiff as markedly limited in his ability to carry out detailed instructions, to maintain attention and concentration for extended periods, to perform activities within a schedule, to maintain regular attendance, to be punctual within customary tolerances, to complete a normal work-day and workweek without interruptions from psychologically based symptoms and to perform at a consistent pace without an unreasonable number and length of rest periods. Plaintiff was moderately limited in his abilities to carry out very short and simple instructions, to sustain an ordinary routine without special supervision, to work in coordination with or proximity to others without being distracted by them, to make simple work-related decisions, to interact appropriately with the general public, to ask simple questions or request assistance, to accept instructions and respond appropriately to criticism from supervisors, to get along with coworkers or peers without distracting them or exhibiting behavioral extremes, to maintain socially appropriate behavior and to adhere to basic standards of neatness and cleanliness. According to Dr. Hamill, plaintiff's condition would likely deteriorate if he were placed under the stress of a job. PageID 502-06.

In November 2010, Dr. Stump reported that plaintiff's performance on the Daily Living Skills Domain of the Vineland Adaptive Behavior Scales indicated that plaintiff's mental age was eleven years old. PageID 547-48.

On March 17, 2011, i.e., after the administrative law judge's decision, Dr. Hamill stated that he agreed with Dr. Stump's assessment of plaintiff's mental age and opined that plaintiff could not be competitive in the workplace. PageID 578.

In his decision, the administrative law judge found that plaintiff's severe impairments consist of borderline intellectual functioning, an affective disorder, and low back strain. PageID 69. The administrative law judge went on to find that plaintiff's impairments neither meet nor equal a listed impairment, including Listing 12.04. PageID 69. In assessing plaintiff's mental impairments, the administrative law judge found that plaintiff has, inter alia, moderate difficulty in social functioning. PageID 70. The administrative law judge next found that plaintiff has the residual functional capacity to perform a limited range of medium work. In this regard, although the administrative law judge noted that the record since the prior administrative decision contained new and material evidence, "the evidence does not establish that the claimant's condition has significantly changed since that time." PageID 72. The administrative law judge therefore "adopted" the findings of the prior administrative decision regarding plaintiff's functional capacity. Id. Relying on the vocational evidence adduced at the prior administrative hearing, PageID 74, the administrative law judge found that plaintiff's residual functional capacity does not preclude the performance of his past relevant work as a golf course laborer, packer, and box assembler. Accordingly, the administrative law judge concluded that plaintiff is not disabled within the meaning of the Social Security Act. PageID 74.

Pursuant to 42 U.S.C. §405(g), judicial review of the Commissioner's decision is limited to determining whether the findings of the administrative law judge are supported by substantial evidence and employed the proper legal standards. Richardson v. Perales, 402 U.S. 389 (1971). Longworth v. Comm'r of Soc. Sec., 402 F.3d 591, 595 (6th Cir. 2005). Substantial evidence is more than a scintilla of evidence but less than a preponderance; it is such relevant evidence as a reasonable mind might accept as adequate to support a conclusion. Jones v. Comm'r of Soc. Sec., 336 F.3d 469, 475 (6th Cir. 2003); Kirk v. Secretary of Health & Human Servs., 667 F.2d 524, 535 (6th Cir. 1981). This Court does not try the case de novo, nor does it resolve conflicts in the evidence or questions of credibility. Bass v. McMahon, 499 F.3d 506, 509 (6th Cir. 2007).

In determining the existence of substantial evidence, this Court must examine the administrative record as a whole. Kirk, 667 F.2d at 536. If the Commissioner's decision is supported by substantial evidence, it must be affirmed even if this Court would decide the matter differently, Tyra v. Sec'y of Health & Human Servs., 896 F.2d 1024, 1028 (6th Cir. 1990)(citing Kinsella v. Schweiker, 708 F.2d 1058, 1059 (6th Cir. 1983)), and even if substantial evidence also supports the opposite conclusion. Longworth, 402 F.3d at 595.

In his Statement of Errors, plaintiff contends that the administrative law judge's determination that plaintiff's mental impairments do not meet Listing 12.04 lacks substantial support in the evidence because plaintiff's functional limitations are greater than those found by the administrative law judge, that the administrative law judge erred in discounting Dr. Hamill's opinions, and that the administrative law judge erred in adopting the residual functional capacity assessment and vocational determination made in the prior administrative hearing in light of new and material evidence and greater limitation of function. Statement of Errors, PageID 595. This Court agrees that the action should be remanded for further consideration.

The administrative law judge found that plaintiff's bipolar disorder neither meets nor equals a listed impairment. Listing 12.04, which addresses affective disorders, requires that a claimant satisfy the "A criteria" of the listing and either the "B criteria" or the "C criteria" of the listing. The "A criteria" are satisfied by medical documentation of bipolar syndrome with a history of episodic periods; evidence of persistent disturbances of mood or affect is sufficient to satisfy the "A criteria." Rabbers v. Commissioner, Soc. Sec. Admin., 582 F.3d 647, 653 (6th Cir. 2009).

The "B criteria" are satisfied by a showing of at least two of the following functional limitations: (1) a marked restriction of activities of daily living, (2) marked difficulties in maintaining social functioning, (3) marked difficulties in maintaining concentration, persistence, or pace, or (4) repeated episodes of decompensation, each of extended duration.

If the "B criteria" are not met, the listing may nevertheless be satisfied if the "C criteria" are met, i.e., with evidence of a medically documented history of a chronic affective disorder of at least two years' duration that has caused more than a minimal limitation of ability to do basic work activities with symptoms or signs currently attenuated by medical or psychosocial support and one of the following: (1) repeated episodes of decompensation, each of extended duration; (2) a residual disease process that has resulted in such marginal adjustment that even a minimal increase in mental demands or change in the environment would be predicted to cause the claimant to decompensate; or (3) a current history of one or more years' inability to function outside a supportive living arrangement, with an indication of continued need for such an arrangement. 20 C.F.R. pt. 404, Subpt. P, App.1, § 12.04.

In considering whether plaintiff's affective disorder meets or equals the "B criteria" of Listing 12.04, the administrative law judge's findings were identical to those of the state agency psychologists, although he did not expressly adopt Dr. Meyer's opinions in making those findings. *See PageID 70-71.*¹ In considering whether plaintiff's mental impairments satisfy the "C criteria" of Listing 12.04, the administrative law judge cited to no opinion evidence - or indeed to any evidence in the record - but merely tracked the language of the listing:

There is no medical documentation of repeated episodes of decompensation, a residual disease process that has resulted in such marginal adjustment that even a minimal increase in mental demands or change in the environment would be predicted to cause the claimant to decompensate, or a current history of an inability to function outside of a highly supported living arrangement.

PageID 71. There is certainly evidence in the record to suggest that plaintiff's mental impairments may satisfy the "C criteria" of Listing 12.04: plaintiff has been diagnosed and treated for bipolar disorder for more than two (2) years and his relationship with and dependence on his mother may reflect an inability to function outside of a highly supported living arrangement. However, the administrative law judge failed to evaluate that evidence in connection with his consideration of Listing 12.04. Under these circumstances, the Court simply cannot determine whether the administrative law judge's evaluation in this regard enjoys substantial support in the record.

The Court also concludes that the Commissioner erred in adopting the residual functional capacity assessment and vocational determination made in the prior administrative proceeding in light of the greater limitation of mental function found by the administrative law judge in the later proceeding. In the earlier proceeding, plaintiff was found to have mild limitation in social functioning, PageID 106; in the current proceedings, plaintiff was found to have moderate limitation in social functioning, PageID 70. Yet, the administrative law judge expressly found that "the limitations in the prior ALJ decision have not increased." PageID 73. He therefore adopted the residual functional capacity and vocational evidence of the prior proceeding. PageID 72, 74. Because the reasoning of the administrative law judge in this regard is internally inconsistent, the Court cannot conclude that the Commissioner's decision enjoys substantial support in the record.

It is therefore RECOMMENDED that the decision of the Commissioner be reversed and that the action be remanded for further proceedings.²

PageID 73.

² In light of this recommendation, the Court need not and does not address plaintiff's remaining contention.

If any party seeks review by the District Judge of this Report and Recommendation, that party may, within fourteen (14) days, file and serve on all parties objections to the Report and Recommendation, specifically designating this Report and Recommendation, and the part thereof in question, as well as the basis for objection thereto. 28 U.S.C. §636(b)(1); F.R. Civ. P. 72(b). Response to objections must be filed within fourteen (14) days after being served with a copy thereof. F.R. Civ. P. 72(b).

The parties are specifically advised that failure to object to the Report and Recommendation will result in a waiver of the right to de novo review by the District Judge and of the right to appeal the decision of the District Court adopting the Report and Recommendation.
