

lumbosacral spine. He could squat about one-third of the way down before complaining of pain. Straight leg raising was negative, but Plaintiff complained of pain with full flexion. The assessment was chronic low back pain and depression, among other conditions. Dr. Ayesu-Offei said that Plaintiff "should be able to maintain sedentary activity." (Tr. 289-90).

Dr. Rudy did a similar evaluation on February 12, 2014. He noted that Plaintiff did exhibit some low back pain on testing and that his primary problem was chronic lung disease, which would preclude him from carrying more than 20 pounds for more than 25 yards. (Tr. 297-98). Later, Plaintiff exhibited some reduced ability to walk which was suggestive of exercise impairment. (Tr. 348).

The state agency physicians in this case who expressed opinions as to Plaintiff's physical capacity were Drs. Gardner and Delphia. Both thought that Plaintiff could do a reduced range of medium work. As noted in the prior Opinion and Order, the ALJ found him capable of a reduced range of light work.

IV. Motion to Reconsider

In the argument portion of his motion, Plaintiff reiterates his assertion that the ALJ did not have a substantial basis for rejecting Dr. Ayesu-Offei's opinion that Plaintiff was limited to sedentary work. He contends that the Court committed a clear error of law by misunderstanding this argument and concluding that the ALJ was under no obligation to accept verbatim any particular medical source statement about residual functional capacity. In response, the Commissioner argues that the ALJ's decision was reasonable and supported by the evidence, including the fact that Dr. Ayesu-Offei's opinion did not specifically limit Plaintiff to sedentary work and that the state agency physicians reached a different conclusion, which the ALJ was entitled to consider in fashioning a residual functional capacity

After considering Plaintiff's argument, the Court is not persuaded that it made a legal error in its prior Opinion and Order. The question addressed there - which is the key question in this case- is whether the ALJ had a substantial basis for discounting Dr. Ayesu-Offei's opinion, to the extent that the opinion intended to limit Plaintiff to sedentary work. The Court will not repeat its discussion here, other than to say that after considering this precise question, it determined that a reasonable person could have reached that conclusion based on this record, which contained few objective findings that suggested such a restriction on Plaintiff's physical abilities. The Court therefore declines the invitation to reach a different decision now.

V. Decision

Based on the above discussion, Plaintiff's motion to alter or amend judgment (Doc. 20) is granted in part and denied in part. The Opinion and Order (Doc. 18) is amended to delete the summary of the medical evidence contained in that Order and to substitute the summary set out in Section III of this Order. The motion is otherwise denied.
