MEMORANDUM OPINION

AUGUST 20, 2018

Before the Court is Plaintiffs Erika Mendoza and James Hunt's Motion for Retransfer to the United States District Court for the Eastern District of California, or in the alternative, to Consolidate this Action with the Rice/Kukich Consolidated Action. For the reasons that follow, retransfer will be denied. Consolidation of this case with the Rice/Kukich v. Electrolux Home Products, Inc., No. 4:15-cv-00371, and Mauro v. Electrolux Home Products, Inc., et al., No. 4:18-cv-00539, in the interest of judicial economy, will be ordered. Plaintiffs' Motion, to the extent it seeks consolidation, is therefore granted.

I. BACKGROUND

On February 18, 2015, Elaine Rice (“Plaintiff Rice”) filed a consumer class action in this Court against Electrolux Home Products, Inc. (“Defendant Electrolux”) alleging that a microwave handle used in Defendant Electrolux’s microwaves is defective (“Rice Action”). Plaintiff Rice specifically alleged that this handle can reach temperatures of over 168°F when the range below is activated, and that this high temperature presents a “risk of serious injury” to anyone who touches it.¹ Following the resolution of an initial motion to dismiss and motion to strike,² Defendant Electrolux filed an Answer and the parties began factual discovery.³ Discovery proved complicated, and this Court, by Memoranda and Orders dated June 17, 2016 and January 10, 2017, resolved both a Motion to Compel and a subject matter jurisdiction challenge.⁴ The Rice Action has since progressed through discovery.

Following the transfer of another action based on Defendant Electrolux’s alleged defective microwave handles from the District of Maryland to this Court, the parties, by stipulation, proposed both the consolidation of this action (“Kukich Action”) with the Rice Action, and the filing of a consolidated amended complaint.⁵ I adopted that stipulation and Plaintiffs Rice and Kukich thereafter filed a Consolidated Amended Class Action Complaint in this now restyled Rice/Kukich Action.⁶ Although currently subject to a Rule 12(b)(6) challenge, this Amended Complaint alleges the following causes of action: (1) declaratory relief pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2201 et seq.; (2) strict liability-design defect and failure to warn; (3) negligent failure to warn; (4) violation of the Magnuson Moss Consumer Products Warranties Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2301 et seq.; (5) breach of implied warranty of merchantability; (6) breach of express warranty; and (7) negligence.⁷

During the pendency of the Rice/Kukich action, two cases were transferred to this court: Mendoza v. Electrolux Home Products, Inc., et al., No. 4:17-CV-02028 (“Mendoza Action”) and Mauro v. Electrolux Home Products, Inc., et al., No. 4:18-cv-00539 (“Mauro Action”). The Mendoza Action was commenced in the Eastern District of California and transferred to this Court on November 20, 2017.⁸ The parties did not stipulate to consolidation with the Rice/Kukich Action as had occurred when the Kukich Action was transferred to this Court.

While subject to multiple Rule 12(b)(6) challenges, the operative complaint in the Mendoza Action alleges the following causes of action: (1) violation of

California's Consumers Legal Remedies Act, (2) violation of California's Unfair Competition Law, and (3) violation of California's Song-Beverly Consumer Warranty Act.⁹ Beyond the pleading challenges filed by various defendants since this case's transfer, Plaintiffs in the Mendoza action filed the instant motion to retransfer this action or, in the alternative, consolidate it with the Rice/Kukich and Mauro actions.¹⁰

The Mauro Action was commenced in the Northern District of New York and transferred to this Court on March 6, 2018.¹¹ This action alleges the following causes of action: (1) violation of New York General Business Law, (2) violation of the Magnuson-Moss Consumer Products Warranties Act, (3) breach of implied warranty of merchantability, and (4) unjust enrichment.¹² Again, like the Mendoza Action, the parties did not stipulate to the consolidation of this matter with the Rice/Kukich Action or the Mendoza Action. Rather, the defendants filed another spate of motions to dismiss, and Plaintiffs filed a Motion to Retransfer to the Northern District of New York. The spate of motions filed in the Rice/Kukich, Mendoza, and Mauro Actions are all ripe for disposition.

II. ANALYSIS

A. Whether This Action Should be Retransferred to the Eastern District of California

Because retransfer of this action would necessarily relieve this Court of merits determination, I will first address the arguments which Plaintiffs advance in their Motion for Retransfer and/or Consolidation.¹³ On this point, Plaintiffs argue that retransfer is necessary (1) because this Court lacks personal jurisdiction over Defendants Sharp Manufacturing Company of America, Midea America Corporation, and Modesto Direct Appliance, Inc; and (2) because Defendant Electrolux's opposition to consolidation frustrates the purpose of this case's original transfer.¹⁴ Neither argument warrants retransfer.

Retransfer of venue by a transferee court is appropriate where circumstances have changed such that the original purposes of transfer have been frustrated.¹⁵ Here, Plaintiffs in the Mendoza Action filed an Amended Complaint following transfer which added Sharp Manufacturing Company of America ("SMCA"), Midea America Corporation ("Midea America"), and Modesto Direct Appliance,

Inc. (“Modesto”) as defendants.¹⁶ Plaintiffs now argue that retransfer of this action is appropriate because this Court lacks jurisdiction over these added Defendants.¹⁷ To be sure, Title 28 of the United States Code, Section 1631 provides that “[w]henver a civil action is filed in a court . . . and that court finds that there is a want of jurisdiction, the court shall, if it is in the interest of justice, transfer such action or appeal to any other such court in which the action or appeal could have been brought at the time it was filed or noticed.” Contrary to the assertion of Plaintiffs, however, personal jurisdiction is not lacking over the Defendants at issue.

Personal jurisdiction exists where the defendant has “certain minimum contacts with [Pennsylvania] such that the maintenance of the suit does not offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice.”¹⁸ There are, in turn, two types of personal jurisdiction: general jurisdiction, and specific jurisdiction.¹⁹ However, because the requirement of personal jurisdiction is “an individual right,” it may be waived through either express or implied consent by the at-issue defendant.²⁰ Here, Defendants Modesto and Midea America together argue that this Court has personal jurisdiction (1) over them pursuant to their waiver of challenge to same, and (2) over SMCA by virtue of its registration as a foreign corporation in the state.²¹ I agree.

First, I note that both Modesto and Midea America have waived any challenge to the personal jurisdiction of this Court. Indeed, “a party is deemed to have consented to personal jurisdiction if the party actually litigates the underlying merits or demonstrates a willingness to engage in extensive litigation in the forum.”²² Modesto and Midea America have done both. In their briefs in opposition, Modesto and Midea America have explicitly stated their consent to this Court’s exercise of personal jurisdiction over them.²³ Moreover, this waiver is memorialized by the absence of any jurisdictional challenge in their filed motions to dismiss and their willingness to engage in a merits analysis.²⁴

²⁴ See generally ECF No. 95 (seeking dismissal of Plaintiffs’ claims against Midea America for myriad of merits-based reasons); ECF No. 77 (seeking dismissal of Plaintiffs’ claims against Modesto for myriad of merits-based reasons).

More challenging, but similarly unavailing, is the issue of this Court's jurisdiction over SMCA. One way in which consent may be effectuated is through "state procedures which find constructive consent to the personal jurisdiction of the state court in the voluntary use of certain state procedures."²⁵ In this matter, both Plaintiffs and SMCA argue—albeit for the different reasons—that personal jurisdiction over it is wanting. Co-Defendants Modesto and Midea America, however, contend a well-tested argument that, by virtue of its registration to do in business in Pennsylvania, SMCA has consented to the general jurisdiction of courts within Pennsylvania.²⁶

a) General rule.--The existence of any of the following relationships between a person and this Commonwealth shall constitute a sufficient basis of jurisdiction to enable the tribunals of this Commonwealth to exercise general personal jurisdiction over such person, or his personal representative in the case of an individual, and to enable such tribunals to render personal orders against such person or representative:

Based on this language, the Third Circuit in Bane v. Netlink, Inc. explicitly held that a defendant who is authorized to do business in Pennsylvania has, under Section 5301(a)(2)(i), consented to the exercise of personal jurisdiction by Pennsylvania courts.²⁸ At first blush, this holding should end the argument. Plaintiffs and SMCA, however, contend that Bane has since been implicitly abrogated by more recent Supreme Court personal jurisdiction cases, including Daimler AG v. Bauman, 571 U.S. 117 (2014).²⁹ While this argument has created a divergence of opinion among my sister district courts,³⁰ I find those who have read Bane as continuing to confer personal jurisdiction over corporations registered in Pennsylvania to be in the right. Here's why.

In Daimler, the Supreme Court restricted general personal jurisdiction over a foreign corporation to fora where the corporation was “essentially at home.”³¹ The formulated definition of “at home” includes a corporation’s principal place of business and its place of incorporation.³² Here, SMCA is not “at home” in Pennsylvania under this definition. However, as noted by the cases which continue to follow Bane, significant is what the Daimler Court did not say concerning consent to jurisdiction. Rather, the sole discussion regarding consent involves a reference to Perkins v. Benguet Consol. Mining Co., where general jurisdiction was found over a foreign corporation that had “not consented to suit in the forum.”³³ This recognition of consent, in the absence of further discussion questioning its viability, negates the argument that Daimler in some way rendered Bane abrogated.

This Court therefore remains bound by the Third Circuit’s holding in Bane, and thus can exercise personal jurisdiction over SMCA in this matter pursuant to consent evidenced by its registration to do in business in Pennsylvania.

B. Whether This Action Should be Consolidated with the Rice/Kukich and Mauro Actions

Also encompassed within Plaintiffs' Motion for Retransfer is the argument that, because Defendant Electrolux has not consented to consolidation with the Rice/Kukich and Mauro actions post-transfer, retransfer is appropriate as the underlying impetus for transfer has been frustrated. As an alternative to retransfer, and should this Court find personal jurisdiction over various defendants (as it did above), Plaintiffs request that the Court, over the objection of these same Defendants, exercise its discretion and consolidate these actions. I will first address whether consolidation of this action with Rice/Kukich and Mauro actions is appropriate under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 42. If I find consolidation is inappropriate, the Court will only then address whether that decision completely frustrates the purpose of transfer so as to mandate retransfer.

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 42(a) provides that a court may consolidate separate actions that are pending before the court if the actions "involve a common question of law or fact."³⁴ The intent of consolidation is "to streamline and economize pretrial proceedings so as to avoid duplication of effort."³⁵ A district court has broad power to consolidate actions that involve a common question of law or fact.³⁶ Guiding that discretion, however, is a consideration of “the savings of time and effort . . . against the prejudice, inconvenience, or expense that [consolidation] might cause.”³⁷

Here, as the party moving for consolidation, Plaintiffs bear the burden of demonstrating its appropriateness.³⁸ They make the following arguments toward satisfying that burden. First, Plaintiffs argue that the Rice/Kukich, Mendoza, and Mauro actions share a common factual background, i.e. they all involve the Over-the-Range Microwaves with the same alleged stainless steel handle defect.³⁹ Therefore, because the purpose of transfer to this district in both actions was the purpose of judicial economy, Plaintiffs aver that this purpose in essence mandates both the consolidation of these actions, and the filing of a single consolidated complaint.⁴⁰ The Defendants in turn largely recognize that the efficiency of the transferring courts must be effectuated in some way, and offer a myriad of options to accomplish that goal.

The only Defendant opposing consolidation outright is SMCA. Indeed, SMCA argues that Plaintiffs’ claims against it in the instant matter cannot be consolidated with those against defendants in the Rice/Kukich and Mauro actions because this Court lacks jurisdiction. SMCA continues that, because Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 42(a) only allows for consolidation of “actions before the Court,” the lack of personal jurisdiction over SMCA in Pennsylvania renders this action not “before the Court” and Rule 42 inapplicable.⁴¹ Given this Court’s determination that personal jurisdiction over SMCA exists in Pennsylvania, this argument is moot in considering whether consolidation is appropriate.

Midea America opposes wholesale consolidation of this case, but recommends, in essence, discovery sharing. It specifically argues that, because neither Plaintiffs Rice nor Kukich purchased a purchased a microwave from Midea China, but instead Sharp Thailand, they are not a proper defendant to those plaintiffs, and consolidation would prejudice them. Furthermore, Midea American states that consolidation would result in the addition of claims beyond the California statutory claims characterizing this action, including Pennsylvania, Maryland, and New York statutory claims and Maryland and New York common law tort claims.⁴² Midea America cites the potential confusion for a jury which would result from being instructed on the law of four different states.⁴³ In the face of this prejudice, Midea America posits an alternate path for achieving the judicial economy envisioned by the transferring courts—extending the protective order in the Rice/Kukich action to this and the Mauro actions, thereby allowing for easier sharing of discovery.⁴⁴

Having considered the positions of the parties and the procedural postures of the respective cases, the Court agrees that consolidation at this juncture for purposes of discovery and pre-trial management is appropriate to accomplish the goal of judicial economy envisioned by Rule 42. First, I note that, while the instant matter and the Rice/Kukich and Mauro matters invoke the state law of California, Pennsylvania, Maryland, and New York respectively, they nevertheless involve the same general factual background, i.e. a potentially defective stainless steel microwave handle. That factual dispute concerning defectiveness rests at the heart of all of these matters. The parties agree that discovery in the advanced Rice/Kukich action is relevant to this dispute and should be shared among the parties. Moreover, and as recognized by the transferring courts, these actions contain substantially similar and at times overlapping legal claims. For instance, like the Rice/Kukich action, the Mauro action raised causes of action including violation of the Magnuson-Moss Consumer Products Warranties Act, 15, U.S.C. § 2301, and breach of implied warranty of merchantability.⁴⁵ Also like Rice/Kukich, the Mendoza action contains both (1) a claim for breach of implied warranty under the Song-Beverly Consumer Warranty Act, and (2) a UCL claim based in part on a violation of the Magnuson Moss Warranty Act.⁴⁶

Given that the same factual background colors the actions before me and the significant overlap of claims, common sense dictates that consolidation of some kind will further the interest of judicial economy. Two concerns, however, temper the extent of consolidation appropriate. First, significant discovery has already taken place in the Rice/Kukich action, and consolidation may, to some extent, slow the continued progress of that case. While this advanced posture of discovery in the Rice/Kukich action as compared to the Mauro and Mendoza actions may recommend against consolidation, it does not “preclude consolidation automatically.”⁴⁷ Rather, this fact remains but one consideration in determining the propriety of consolidation.⁴⁸

Despite that caveat, the benefits of consolidation for discovery and pre-trial management are considerable. First, rather than determine the common issues to these cases piece meal, consolidated proceedings will allow the Court to educate itself on the facts and complex legal issues common to all actions on one occasion and in one opinion. Second, the parties themselves stand to benefit from sharing of discovery already completed in the Rice/Kukich action and the ability to respond to the opposing parties' arguments in one consolidated pleading rather than across three docket sheets. Third, and perhaps most persuasively, the Court believes consolidation, while potentially slowing the progress of the Rice/Kukich action as it currently stands, will ultimately result in expedited resolution of all issues before the Court.

Midea America, however, rightly points out the potential for confusion and prejudice at trial given that the Rice/Kukich, Mendoza, and Mauro actions bring claims under Pennsylvania, Maryland, California, and New York law, respectively, as stated above. Midea America is also correct that the potential for juror confusion among the various claims and against differing defendants to those claims does weigh against consolidation.⁴⁹ However, the limited consolidation which will be ordered here—discovery and pre-trial management—should account for the concerns of this lone objector. I will reserve for future determination the propriety of consolidation of these actions at trial.⁵⁰

⁵⁰ See, e.g., Eastman Chemical Co. v. AlphaPet, Inc., 2011 WL 7121180, at *9 (D.Del. Dec. 29, 2011)(consolidating for purposes of pre-trial management, but otherwise reserving the issue of consolidation at trial)(collecting cases); Chito v. Hilcorp Energy Co., 2015 WL 5084313,

Having determined that consolidation of discovery and pre-trial management in the interest of judicial economy is appropriate, the Court must next fashion a workable timeline to close the pleadings in this consolidated action and advance this case in an efficient manner. To that end, I find that the most sensible option is to require Plaintiffs to submit a consolidated amended complaint encompassing, but not expanding, the claims within the Rice/Kukich, Mendoza, and Mauro actions.⁵¹ While this filing will necessarily moot the pending motions to dismiss in all three actions,⁵² this course of conduct will prevent the Court from having to address potentially duplicative motions to dismiss ad seriatim. Furthermore, this practice will bring about a closure of the pleadings sooner, and in uniformity, and therefore allow the parties to expeditiously complete remaining discovery and file a class certification motion.

Accordingly, the parties shall meet and confer concerning the required time to complete discovery and file class certification and dispositive motions in this action. Contemporaneous with the filing of the consolidated amended class action complaint, the parties shall file an amended proposed case management order for this Court's review and potential adoption.

III. CONCLUSION

Based on the above reasoning, this Court makes the following case management actions. First, Plaintiffs Motion for Retransfer and/or consolidation is denied to the extent it seeks retransfer, but granted to the extent it seeks consolidation with Rice/Kukich v. Electrolux Home Products, Inc., No. 4:15-cv-00371, and Mauro v. Electrolux Home Products, Inc., et al., No. 4:18-cv-00539.

To effect this consolidation and to expeditiously progress these cases, Plaintiffs in the now consolidated action are directed to file an Amended Complaint within thirty (30) days of this Order. Because the filing of this Consolidated Amended Complaint would necessarily supersede the complaints of the now separate actions, motions to dismiss in all three actions will be denied as moot without prejudice to the parties refiling in response to the consolidated complaint.

The parties are also directed to meet and confer concerning case management deadlines in this case. Contemporaneous with the filing of a consolidated amended complaint, the parties shall file a proposed case management order for this Court's review and potential adoption which contains deadlines allowing for additional needed discovery and the filing of any class certification motion.
