4 MANUEL FRANCO-FIGUEROA, et. al.,

Plaintiffs,

v.

STATE INSURANCE FUND, et. al.,

Defendants.

Civil No. 11-1025 (JAF)

5 6 OPINION AND ORDER

7 We must decide whether an employee's evidence of discrimination is sufficient to 8 withstand his employer's motion for summary judgment in this political discrimination 9 case.

10 I.

11 Background

12 Because we must view all facts in the light most favorable to the non-moving 13 party when considering a summary judgment motion, to the extent that any facts are 14 disputed, the facts set forth below represent Plaintiffs' version of the events at issue.
15 Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587 (1986). However, 16 where Plaintiffs' asserted facts do not properly comply with Local Rule 56(c) and (e), we 17 deem Defendants' properly-supported statements as admitted. See Cosme-Rosado v.
18 Serrano-Rodriguez, 360 F.3d 42, 45 (1st Cir. 2004) (affirming district court's decision to 19 deem moving party's statements of facts admitted if opposing party fails to controvert 20 properly).

1 Plaintiffs were employees of Puerto Rico’s State Insurance Fund Corporation 2 (“SIFC”), an entity of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico responsible for administering 3 the local workers’ compensation program. (Docket Nos. 1 at 10 and 109 at 2.) Plaintiffs’
4 positions were annulled, following an audit commissioned by codefendants Zoimé 5 Alvarez–Rubio, Administrator of the SIFC, and Sául Rivera, formerly the Associate 6 Director of Human Resources at SIFC. (Id. at 9-10.) The audit reviewed 3,835 files and 7 showed that 232 personnel appointments, including Plaintiffs, were made through closed 8 or internal SIFC recruitment announcements, in violation of Article 14 of the SIFC’s 9 Personnel Regulations requiring open competition. (Docket No. 109 at 7.) As a result, 10 Alvarez-Rubio ordered the annulment of all the improper personnel transactions.
11 (Docket No. 89-1 at 5.). She made no exceptions. (Id.) Alvarez-Rubio sent a letter to 12 each affected employee, communicating her intent to annul their appointments. All of 13 the letters explained the audit findings, and the policy that the improper appointments 14 violated. Plaintiffs later appealed through the Commonwealth judicial system. The 15 Puerto Rico Supreme Court confirmed that the promotions violated Commonwealth law 16 and that the annulments were legal. Gonzalez-Segarra v. State Insurance Fund 17 Corporation, Offic. Trans. CC-2011-1051 (March 19, 2013).

18 II.

19 Legal Standard

20
22 The defendants are entitled to summary judgment on a claim if they can show that 23 there is no genuine dispute over the material facts underlying the claim. Celotex Corp. v.
24 Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323 (1986). We must decide whether a reasonable jury could find

1 for plaintiffs on each of their claims when all reasonable inferences from the evidence are 2 drawn in their favor. See Scott v. Harris, 550 U.S. 372, 380 (2007).

3 III.

4 Discussion

5
6
7 Section 1983 creates a cause of action against those who, acting under color of 8 state law, violate a plaintiff's constitutional or federal rights. See 42 U.S.C. § 1983; 9 Maine v. Thiboutot, 448 U.S. 1, 4(1980); see, e.g., Barrios-Velázquez v. Asociación de 10 Empleados del Estado Libre Asociado de P.R., 84 F.3d 487, 491 (1st Cir. 1996). Here, 11 Plaintiffs assert that there are triable claims, including violations of the federal 12 constitution and Puerto Rico law. All of these claims lack merit.

13 Qualified immunity bars Plaintiffs' political affiliation discrimination claim 14 against Defendants. To determine whether qualified immunity applies, a court must 15 decide whether (1) the facts that a plaintiff has alleged or shown make out a violation of a 16 constitutional right, and (2) the right at issue was "clearly established" at the time of 17 defendant's alleged misconduct. Pearson v. Callahan, 555 U.S. 223, 230-33 (2009) 18 (citing Saucier v. Katz, 533 U.S. 194, 201 (2001)). Government employees who do not 19 occupy policy-making positions of trust and confidence are protected against adverse 20 employment actions based on their political affiliation. Peguero-Moronta v. Santiago, 21 464 F.3d 29, 45 (1st Cir. 2006).

22 Thus, the sole question is whether Plaintiffs have shown a violation of their 23 constitutional rights. They must, among other things, present evidence: (1) that 24 Defendants knew of their political affiliation, and (2) that their political affiliation was a

1 “substantial” or “motivating” factor in Defendants’ decision to terminate Plaintiffs. Id. at 2 48; Gonzalez-De-Blasini v. Family Department, 377 F.3d 81, 85 (1st Cir. 2004) (citing 3 Mt. Healthy City Sch. Dist. Bd. of Educ. v. Doyle, 429 U.S. 274, 287 (1977)). Plaintiffs 4 have failed to present evidence of either requirement.

5 A. Knowledge of Plaintiffs’ Political Affiliation

6 Plaintiffs did not make out a prim-facie case of discrimination, because they 7 presented no evidence that Defendants knew or had reason to know that Plaintiffs were 8 members of the PDP. Welch v. Ciampa, 542 F.3d 927, 938–39 (1st Cir.2008) (stating 9 that the plaintiff must show the defendant has knowledge of her political affiliation to 10 establish a prima-face case of political discrimination) (quoting Martinez–Vélez v. Rey– 11 Hernández, 506 F.3d 32, 39 (1st Cir. 2007). Alvarez-Rubio testified in her deposition 12 that she did not have any knowledge of the Plaintiffs’ political affiliations prior to the 13 complaint's filing. (Docket No. 89-2 at 12). She answered the question directly:

14 Q. Do you know the political affiliation of Zaida from the 15 hospital?

16
17 A. No. No, and I refer to the same answer that I gave you at 18 the beginning that I do not know the political affiliation of 19 any of my employees.

20
21 (Docket No. 99-1 at 90-1.) Plaintiffs either admit that they cannot affirm that Alvarez-22 Rubio knows their political affiliations or that they have never talked with her regarding 23 their political affiliations. (Docket No. 109 at 18.) Rivera, as well, did not have 24 knowledge of Plaintiffs’ political affiliation prior to receiving the complaint. (Docket 25 No. 89-10 at 13.)

1           In response to this evidence from the Defendants, Plaintiffs point only to a series 2 of spreadsheets included in the audit report that detail those employees whose promotions 3 were annulled. (Docket No. 89-4 at 18-34.) The spreadsheets include: The names of 4 each employee; their job title and location prior to their promotion; their salary; their 5 position's job announcement number; and the effective date of their promotion. (Id.)
6 Despite Plaintiffs' suggestion otherwise, nowhere does the spreadsheet include 7 information regarding political affiliation.

8           Plaintiffs also contend that they were well-known and open supporters of the PDP 9 and that their political affiliation was common knowledge at the time of the audit and the 10 subsequent annulments. (Docket No. 1 at 3-8.) We find no support for this assertion 11 adequate to survive summary judgment. While it is true that some of the Plaintiffs have 12 occupied municipal office or trust positions at SIFC or other agencies during PDP 13 administrations, (Docket No. 89-1 at 14, 18, 36), that fact is not sufficient to establish the 14 Defendants were aware of the Plaintiffs' political affiliation. "Evidence that a plaintiff 15 held a trust position under a previous administration of opposing political affiliation, ...
16 may not suffice to show that a challenged employment action was premised upon 17 political affiliation." Ramos-Borges v. Puerto Rico Health Department, 740 F.Supp.2d 18 262, 277 (D.P.R. 2010) (quoting Febus-Cruz v. Sauri-Santiago, 652 F.Supp.2d 140, 149 19 (D.P.R. 2009)). Here, such evidence, even allowing for its tenuousness, is insufficient.
20 Absent this complaint, the Plaintiffs claim their political activities and, in some cases, 21 service in elected office, was generally known to Defendants. But those activities took 1 place away from SIFC premises and after working hours—in some cases, very long ago.

2 (Docket No. 89-1 at 14, 17, 19, 21, 32, 36, 43, 45, 47, 56.)

3 Defendants cannot be liable for annulling Plaintiffs’ promotions on the basis of 4 their PDP affiliation unless Defendants knew or had reason to know Plaintiffs were 5 members of the PDP. Plaintiffs need to provide more than the juxtaposition of 6 circumstantial evidence of unfair treatment with evidence that Defendants’ political 7 affiliation differs from their own. Padilla-Garcia v. Guillermo-Rodriguez, 212 F.3d 69, 8 74 (1st Cir. 2000). Therefore, Plaintiffs’ political discrimination claim fails on this most 9 basic requirement: That the Defendants knew of Plaintiffs’ political affiliation.

10 B. “Substantial” or “Motivating Factor”

11 Assuming arguendo that Plaintiffs had provided evidence that Defendants knew or 12 had reason to know they belonged to the PDP, Plaintiffs still needed to show that their 13 PDP affiliation was a “substantial” or “motivating” factor in the decision to annul their 14 promotions. Mt. Healthy, 429 U.S. at 287; see Vazquez-Valentin v. Santiago-Diaz, 385 15 F.3d 23, 30 (Plaintiff bears burden of producing sufficient evidence that political 16 affiliation was a substantial or motivating factor in challenged employment action.) 17 Plaintiffs did not.

18 To show that their party affiliation was a factor in the annulment of their 19 promotions, Plaintiffs argue that: Alvarez–Rubio requested the audit coincide with the 20 previous PDP administration’s years in office; there was a heavily politicized 21 environment at SIFC following the change in administrations; the NPP affiliates included 22 in the annulments were punished for their support of a rival NPP gubernatorial

1 candidate—otherwise, the annulments had a disproportionate impact on PDP affiliates.
2 Looking at this evidence individually or together, nothing suggests that Plaintiffs’ PDP 3 affiliation was a “substantial” or “motivating” factor in the annulment of their 4 promotions. Defendants provided evidence indicating that Plaintiffs would have had 5 their promotions annulled because the promotions were made in clear violation of 6 Articles 2 and 14.1 of the SIFC Employee Manual.

7 1. Time Frame of the Audit

8 Plaintiffs infer that Alvarez-Rubio selected the time period for the audit because it 9 would disproportionately target PDP employees. (Docket Nos. 1 at 34-5.) Their 10 argument rests on the implied supposition that Alvarez–Rubio ordered a review of all 11 personnel transactions that occurred between 2001 and 2008—or the duration the 12 outgoing PDP administration was in office—solely for the purposes of rooting out 13 promotions given to PDP affiliates. (Docket No. 98 at 8.)

14 However, the evidence in the record supports Defendants’ contention that PDP 15 affiliation played no role—let alone a substantial or motivating one—in the time frame 16 selected for the audit. The time frame chosen merely corresponded to the review of the 17 personnel files of all active employees at the time. (Docket No. 89-1 at 4.) Indeed, 18 between 2001 and 2008 no comprehensive evaluation was done to determine whether 19 personnel transactions, including promotions, were compliant with SIFC regulations and 20 Commonwealth law. (Docket No. 109 at 7.) As the highest executive officer of the 21 SIFC, Alvarez–Rubio’s job required her to administer the agency’s work force. (Id. at 2.) 22 The mere fact that she asked that the agency determine if it was in compliance with its 1 own regulations does not give rise to an inference of discrimination: Quite the opposite.

2 Bending the rules for political advantage might be sufficient grounds for inferring 3 discriminatory intent, but enforcing the rules for all employees is not.

4 2. Politically-charged Environment

5 Plaintiffs claim that there was a highly-charged political atmosphere at SIFC 6 following the November 2008 elections. (Docket No. 98 at 6.) They point to one 7 incident in particular where a group of employees, waving NPP flags in the lobby of an 8 SIFC regional office, yelled at PDP employees that “you are going out” and “this is 9 revenge for all that you fired.” Relying on Anthony v. Sundlun, 952 F.2d 603 (1st 1991), 10 Plaintiffs suggest that the charged atmosphere may be probative of discriminatory 11 animus, especially because the Defendants are from the opposing political faction. (Id.)

12 Sometimes, “[e]vidence of a highly-charged political environment coupled with 13 the parties’ competing political persuasions may be sufficient to show discriminatory 14 animus, especially in an instance where a plaintiff was a conspicuous target for political 15 discrimination.” Rodríguez-Ríos v. Cordero, 138 F.3d 22, 24 (1st Cir. 1998). Such 16 evidence, however, is not sufficient here. Rather, in this case, government officials 17 enforced the law (as the Commonwealth Supreme Court has agreed it should be 18 interpreted) against all employees, including members of both parties, unaffiliated 19 individuals, and employees who were themselves conducting the review. Nothing about 20 those facts permits an inference of animus.

1           3.     The Audit’s Disproportionate Impact on PDP Affiliates and the 2           Inclusion of NPP Affiliates

3
4           Plaintiffs claim the audit had a disproportionate impact on PDP affiliates. (Docket 5 No. 99 at 8.). Plaintiffs further assert that NPP affiliates were only included among those 6 whose promotions were annulled because they openly favored Governor Luis Fortuño’s 7 rival in the NPP primary election. (Docket No. 1 at 12.)

8           Although NPP affiliates commissioned it, the audit did not merely target PDP 9 employees. See Soto-Padro v. Public Bldgs. Authority, 675 F.3d 1, 2 (1st Cir. 2012) (“a 10 reshuffling of positions affects people, and the people affected included NPP and PDP 11 sympathizers”). Plaintiffs could not provide evidence that the audit only impacted 12 members of the PDP. Instead, the summary-judgment submissions here show that 13 compliance with SIFC personnel regulations and Commonwealth law affected members 14 of the PDP and NPP alike.

15           In fact, the audit revealed that even Rivera, the audit director and an affiliate of the 16 NPP, had received an appointment to a career position that violated merit principles and 17 notice provisions. (Id. at 5-6.) His appointment was annulled. (Id.) All told, ten 18 employees affiliated with the NPP had their appointments or promotions annulled.
19 (Docket No. 109 at 11.) Additionally, eight employees unaffiliated with either the PDP
20 or the NPP had their promotions annulled. (Id.)

21           The Supreme Court of Puerto Rico independently concluded that the audit 22 revealed real violations of law that required the improper promotions to be annulled. The 23 Court held that the internally-posted promotions “violated the SIFC Personnel

1 Regulations and contravened the merit principle.” Wanda I. Gonzalez-Segarra v. State 2 Insurance Fund Corporation, P.R. Offic. Trans. CC-2011-1051. Moreover, outside 3 postings guarantee “that appointments and promotions were based in merit and not 4 favoritism” and, here, no circumstances existed to allow for “sidestep[ping] the open 5 competition mechanism.” Id. The Puerto Rico Supreme Court has held on many 6 occasions that the merit principle protects the public interest and affirms the primacy of 7 equal treatment in the selection and promotion of civil servants. See Rodriguez v. Banco 8 Gubernamental de Formento para Puerto Rico, 151 D.P.R. 383, 410.

9 Plaintiffs maintain that the inclusion of NPP affiliates and unaligned employees 10 among those whose promotions were annulled was purely pretextual but that the audit 11 had a disproportionate impact on PDP affiliated employees. While “we recognize that a 12 prima facie case for political discrimination may be built on circumstantial evidence,” 13 Plaintiffs have not supplied “the specific facts necessary to take the asserted claim out of 14 the realm of speculative, general allegations.” Kauffman v. P.R. Tel. Co., 841 F.2d 1169, 15 1173 (1st Cir.1988). Moreover, the mere fact that the uniformly-applied audit had a 16 disproportionate impact on PDP affiliates does not prove Defendants improperly targeted 17 Plaintiffs. Sanchez-Lopez v. Fuentes-Pujols, 375 F.3d 121, 140 (1st Cir. 2004) (“If 18 uniformly applied personnel practices, predicated on legitimate reasons, result in 19 terminations, those terminations are not unconstitutional because those affiliated with one 20 political party are disproportionately impacted.”).

21 The Mt. Healthy defense deals with employment actions driven by “mixed 22 motives,” where both “lawful” and “unlawful” reasons justify an adverse employment

1 action. The defense provides that “if the lawful reason alone would have sufficed to 2 justify the [action],” then the employee cannot prevail. McKennon v. Nashville Banner 3 Pub. Co., 513 U.S. 352, 359 (1995). In this context, that means a plaintiff cannot prove 4 impermissible political discrimination where the Defendants would have taken the same 5 action anyway based on a legitimate reason. Nereida–Gonzalez v. Tirado–Delgado, 990 6 F.2d 701, 706 n. 4 (1st 1993). That is the situation here: The record shows that 7 Defendants would have reclassified Plaintiffs’ positions regardless of any political 8 considerations. So, even if the Defendants had mixed motives for reclassifying Plaintiffs’ 9 positions, Defendants have sufficiently established a Mt. Healthy defense that the 10 Plaintiffs have not been able to rebut.

11 C. Plaintiffs’ Commonwealth Claims

12 Plaintiffs allege violations of rights afforded by the Puerto Rico Civil Code.
13 (Docket No. 1 at 25-7.) Specifically, Plaintiffs allege violations of Law 100 and Articles 14 1802 and 1803 of the Puerto Rico Civil Code, and violations of Article II, Sections One, 15 Four, and Six of the Constitution of Puerto Rico. (Id.) The complaint does not make 16 clear what action constitutes the basis for these violations. Plaintiffs are alleging tort 17 violations under Article 1802 of the Puerto Rico Civil Code. (Docket No. 68 at 26-27.)

18 We have discretion to decline supplemental jurisdiction over the remaining 19 Commonwealth law claims, since we have dismissed all of the claims over which we 20 have original jurisdiction. See 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c)(3); see also United Mine Workers v.
21 Gibbs, 383 U.S. 715, 726 (1966) (“if the federal law claims are dismissed before trial ...
22 the state claims should be dismissed as well). In exercising our discretion under 23 § 1367(c), we must consider the issues of “judicial economy, convenience, fairness, and 1 comity.” Che v. Massachusetts Bay Transp. Authority, 342 F.3d 31, 37 (1st Cir. 2003).

2 Having considered these factors, we decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over 3 Plaintiffs’ Commonwealth law claims and we dismiss them without prejudice.

4 IV.

5 Conclusion

7
8 For the foregoing reasons, Defendants’ summary judgment motion, (Docket 9 No. 89), is GRANTED. Plaintiffs’ federal law claims are DISMISSED WITH 10 PREJUDICE. Plaintiffs’ Commonwealth law claims are DISMISSED WITHOUT 11 PREJUDICE.

12 IT IS SO ORDERED.
