

1 instance, must avail himself of the two-tier system for post-conviction relief established by the 2 Puerto Rico Legislature. See Maldonado Pagan v. Malave, 145 Fed. Appx. 375, 376-77 (1st Cir.
3 2005); Rodriguez v. Warden, Escuela Industrial de Mujeres, Vega Alta, 791 F.Supp. 41, 43 (D.P.R.
4 1992). In the case at bar, after Petitioner was convicted and sentenced, he appealed to the Puerto 5 Rico Court of Appeals, which affirmed the conviction. Thereafter, he filed before the Puerto Rico
6 Supreme Court a writ of certiorari, which was denied. However, Petitioner did not file a motion
7 under P.R. R.CRIM.P. 192.1, P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 34, App. II. R. 192.1, nor a state habeas petition
8 under P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 34 §§ 1741-1743. Accordingly, he did not exhaust his state remedies. See 9 Ortiz Sanchez v. de Leon, Civil No. 08-2236 (CCC), 2011 WL 4625977, at *2 (D.P.R. Sept. 30, 10 2011).

11 The court further notes that Petitioner's appeal and certiorari petition, as well as the present 12 habeas petition, raise factual issues not raised before the state trial court. Specifically, therein, he 13 points to new evidence obtained post conviction, consisting of sworn information which Petitioner 14 argues shows serious and extreme bias on behalf of the state court judge who tried and sentenced 15 him, resulting in a violation of his Federal Due Process rights. This would require that Petitioner
16 first bring this matter to the attention of the State trial court, and not the appellate forums, which do
17 not make credibility nor weight of the evidence determinations. This, again, evidences his failure 18 to properly exhaust state remedies.

19 Notwithstanding Petitioner's failure to exhaust state remedies, he contends in his Response
20 to Order to Show Cause (Docket No. 16) at pages 6-10, 13-14, and 15, that the Commonwealth's 21 judicial system is politicized to such an extreme that it deprives him of any available state corrective 22 process. For example, he states:

23 The Supreme Court [Chief] Justice Federico Hernandez Denton abstained, 24 leaving only the majority PNP appointed justices to denied [sic] the writ. (See Docket No. 16 at 6.)

25 He further states:

26 It is common knowledge that the New Progressive Party, who appointed - 27 recently- a total of five PNP Supreme Court Justices, has been trying to have Chief Judge Federico Hernandez Denton removed as Chief Judge to have a 28 PNP designated judge replace him. (See id. at 8-9.)

1 Next, he concludes that the victim in this case -former Governor and Congressman Carlos Romero
2 Barcelo “controls as Vice-President of the New Progressive Party the appointment of judges and 3 justices.” (See id. at 9.) Such suggestions permeate the habeas petition.

4 This same argument has previously been rejected by the Supreme Court within the Younger 5 context. See Huffman v. Pursue, Ltd., 420 U.S. 592, 610 (1975) (explaining that Article VI of the 6 United States Constitution declares that “the Judges in every state shall be bound” by the Federal 7 Constitution, laws and treaties, and declining to formulate a rule on the assumption that state judges
8 will not be faithful to their constitutional responsibilities); see also Jou v. Chang, 350 F. Supp. 2d
9 862, 869 (D. Hi. 2004) (same); Olson v. Fajardo Velez, 419 F. Supp. 2d 32, 45 (D.P.R. 2006) 10 (same).

11 Once a judge or justice is sworn-in to his position, his or her only loyalty is to the 12 Constitution and laws of the United States, and in the case of state judges, to the Constitution and 13 Laws of the State, as well. The Justices of the Puerto Rico Supreme Court are appointed for life, 14 as are federal judges. The purpose of such life tenure, envisioned by the American Nation’s 15 Founding Fathers, and followed by the Framers of the Puerto Rico Constitution, is to allow for 16 judicial independence and the separation of powers.

17 It is legally unfounded and irresponsible to make such blanket assertions of political bias
18 against the Justices of the Puerto Rico Supreme Court –irrespective of who appointed them– in this,
19 as well as in any other case. More so, it is also ethically irresponsible and sanctionable conduct to 20 do so, without more. See In re Gonzalez Cardona, 179 D.P.R. 548 (2010) (holding that Puerto Rico 21 Canon 9 of Professional Ethics is violated by counsel who unjustifiably attack integrity of judges); 22 In re Cordova Gonzalez, 135 D.P.R. 260 (1994) (disbarring counsel for Canon 9 violations based 23 on unjustifiable attacks to the integrity of federal judges).

24 Accordingly, Petitioner’s habeas petition is DENIED without prejudice. His federal claims 25 should, in the first instance, be addressed by the Commonwealth courts.

26 In addition, the court hereby SANCTIONS attorney Ricardo Izurrieta in the amount of 27 $2,000.00 for his statements regarding the Justices of the Puerto Rico Supreme Court. This court 28 cannot tolerate such unfounded allegations. See In re Zeno, 504 F.3d 64, 67 (1st Cir. 2007) (noting

1 an attorney cannot simply allege a litany of speculative accusations which raise doubt as to a judge's
2 impartiality). Notwithstanding any reconsideration motion filed with the court, or any further appeal
3 filed regarding this order, the sanction shall be deposited with the clerk of court by Monday, 4 September 3, 2012. A copy of this Memorandum, Opinion and Order and counsel's response shall 5 be provided to the Puerto Rico Supreme Court for its consideration as possible violations of the 6 Puerto Rico Canons of Ethics.
