Dear Jeremy:

Google located a set of custodial data, which, based on our examination, does not itself appear to have been processed in its initial or subsequent document productions. These materials are a portion of the private work space areas with mostly html formatted materials (these are mostly word processing and spreadsheet type files). There is approximately 10GB of data that was located.

We believe these materials will not significantly or meaningfully add to the substantive materials that have already been produced, and we further believe that any significant completed materials would have been shared with other custodians via email and the other shared and private work space materials that were produced. Nevertheless, the volume of these materials may be significant if we simply turned over everything regardless of its relevance and adding to this is the fact that the materials have not yet been screened for privilege, work product, or other private employee related data.

In any event, we have searched the raw materials for the following terms, none of which returned any hits:

Michael A. Dean; Michael Dean; Mike Dean; Lucinda Stone; Virtual Cities; Virtualcities.com; O.N.S. Inc., 6446045; 6,446,045; 045 patent; 6829587; 6,829,587; 587 patent; 954820; 954,820; 193465; 193,465; 2005 0044009; 20050044009; 2002 0178093; and 20020178093

If you are interested in reviewing these materials, we would like your input on how to reasonably process them in a way that fairly shares our respective burdens, including relevance, cost, sensitivity, privilege, and employee privacy concerns.
