An Effective Resume Generates Interviews – Not Frustration!

When you submit your resume, does it seem like your phone line was cut? Whether you're out of work, ready for a new job, or shopping for the perfect opportunity, your resume must make the phone ring. A remarkable resume generates interviews.

You - packaged as THE brand employers 'buy'

Companies would never consider marketing their prize product in an outdated, boring wrapper. Mediocre packaging doesn't highlight unique qualities and won't sell the product. A resume that fails to capture the employer's attention has the same affect on your job search. A professionally written resume presents you as the 'brand' of candidate employers hire.

Consider the benefits of a resume that brands YOU as the person to hire:

- Employers recognize you as the solution they need.
- Your resume stays in recruiters' hands instead of the trash bin.
- You gain the competitive edge over your closest competition.
- Your phone starts ringing to schedule interviews.

10 Keys to Selecting a Resume Writing Service

Resume pro® is a registered trademark of Gilbert Resumes

How to Select a Professional Writer

1. Use a certified resume writer. There are several certifications, but the most prestigious of which is the NCRW. Only 27 resume professionals have earned this certification nationwide. Certification is one of your assurances that the writer you select is dedicated to providing the highest quality of service and will deliver a superior product.

2. Speak with the person who will actually be writing your resume? The person who sells you their services may not actually write your resume. You want to work closely with the actual writer, not a subcontractor whose qualifications are unknown to you or whose style doesn't fit your personality.

3. Make sure you understand from the writer what they will be doing to revise your existing résumé or the strategy they will use in developing one from scratch. Remember it is your career. The writer needs to understand your background and be able to provide the right strategy to meet your goals.

4. What is the process used to gather information? Is the writer going to interview you or just give you a form to fill out? If the writer insists on using a form, you may only get back what you provided in different words. Make sure the writer will interview you to search for additional information and ways to present your background to your best advantage. Remember, accomplishments sell. A good résumé writer knows how to pull them out of you.

5. Editing Will you have a chance to make changes and provide input after the résumé writer presents the first draft? This is very important...the writer should be open to your thoughts. Changes are almost always required, even minor ones. Insist on this!

6. What others services, tools, and certifications should the professional writer offer? Professional career service providers are often certified in career coaching and job transition. They will also be able to provide cover letters, resume distribution to recruiters and companies, career portfolios, and interview training

7. What is the turnaround time? Typical turnaround time will vary from writer to writer, but expect a successful résumé writer to be in demand. One to two weeks is normal.

8. Do I have to meet with the writer personally? No, it has become everyday occurrence to work with résumé professionals by phone, transferring documents by Internet and fax, but it is good to know that the résumé firm has a traditional office, even if you don't visit it.

9. How much will it cost? Superior resumes take expertise and time to develop. Fees will vary depending on years of experience, numbers of jobs, and position level. Executives can expect to pay more than mid-tier managers or entry level professionals.
